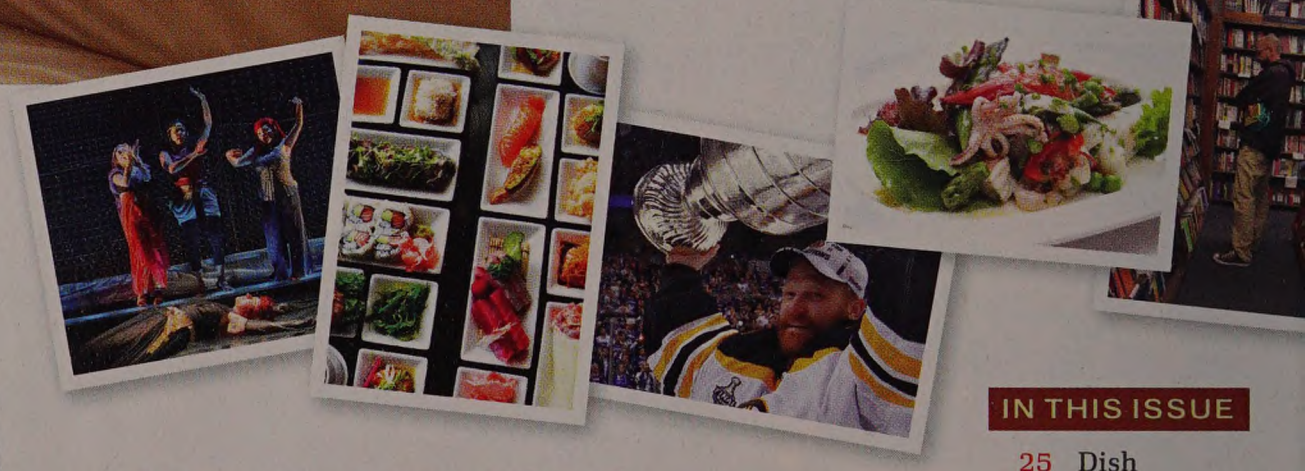
The IMPROPER

Judgment Day

Here's a way to start a bar fight: Pass sweeping judgments about relative quality. It's easy. Tell everyone, for instance, that it's an incontestable truth that the best Shakespeare play is Macbeth. Best Hellenistic satrap: Ptolemy. Best tuber: potato. Now cry havoc, because you've let slip the dogs of heated discourse.



Quality is, of course, subjective. A sandworm will probably have different taste in men's clothiers than does, say, managing editor Nick Altschuller. So, the sandworm may ask, why should a city magazine—no matter how brilliantly edited—presume to elect the "best" of anything? I mean, really. What do we know about the view from the coastal mudflats? We're not even giving an award to Best Burrowing Annelid.

Quality is subjective, but I have a hunch that comparatively few of our readers are sandworms. Rather, I expect they're people who hold at least some beliefs as self-evident. Like that grilled razor clams dressed in garlic butter and tasso ham (see page 62) are delicious. Or that Bethenny Frankel's sale of Skinnygirl Margarita for a reported $120 million is astonishing. Or that Nick shouldn't wear ratty cargo pants.

Assuming our readers agree on broad definitions of refinement, value for money and umami, we've compiled an issue that passes a whole lot of sweeping judgment. Indeed, of all our issues, it's undoubtedly the best.

Oh, and Best Burrowing Annelid? The lugworm.

Pigging Out vs. Dining Out

It's your call. A thick-crusted, cheese-obese, fat-laden, bland tasting slab. Or, a thin-crusted, imported cheese-dressed, fresh veggie-topped, intensely flavorful gourmet slice. Lots of places will sell you the first type, not us. We offer only the second option, even though it's more work and more money. But that's our call. (Maybe even our calling.)

Where There's a Willis

TEAM SPIRIT

IN 2003, legislation passed making it easier for Massachusetts farms to create liquor from their crops. Inspired by the decree, brothers Will and Dave Willis decided to pursue a dream engendered by the lawless history in their basement—during Prohibition, their family's Sherborn farm was a bootlegging storehouse. Now, with their new Bully Boy distillery in Roxbury, the Willis brothers are bottling spirits like aged rum and white whiskey. Their efforts hit shelves just last month, but plans are taking shape for new products, like applejack, that make use of the land. "Small farms in Massachusetts aren't profitable right now," says Dave Willis. "It's nice to find ways to make those old farms useful again." NICK ALTSCHULLER

First Taste

PUBLIC OPTION

There must be something about 755 Boylston that evokes a feeling of community. Once the shadowy Vox Populi, that bar took its moniker from the Latin term for "voice of the people." It shut down in December, locking the people out, but the space wasn't vacant for long.

"This is the perfect location," says Euz Azevedo, owner of the soon-to-open Forum. He's moving a mile a minute, but that shouldn't come as a surprise—Azevedo's Boston Nightlife Ventures operates spots ranging from the Tap in Faneuil Hall to Noche in the South End. As a double-decker upscale eatery, Forum is his most ambitious project to date. "We needed to open it. There was all this amazing real estate and nobody was using it properly."

"THERE WAS ALL THIS AMAZING REAL ESTATE AND NOBODY WAS USING IT."

To amp up the old Vox interior, Azevedo enlisted New York's Project Design Associates, the same folks responsible for L'Espalier and Sel de la Terre across the street. Downstairs, there's a small patio and an angular island bar playing host to a team of flat-screens. Upstairs is a different story. "These are meant to be completely separate areas," says Azevedo, climbing the spotlit staircase. This sort of split-level, multi-experience concept has certainly proven a success at Sel.

On the second floor, origami-inspired panels segment the room into intimate spaces. Private dining and convertibility is a theme. "You could screen a movie back here or have a big business meeting," Azevedo says as he shows off a multimedia-equipped function space which is capable of hosting up to 50 and comes with a pop-out bar. "It's totally customizable." For more seclusion, small parties can request the wine room, a steak house–inspired space surrounded with bottles.

Director of operations/chef Jared Chinacola's menu promises progressive American fare. "We aren't reinventing the wheel," he says, "but we'll be using refined French techniques to provide really specialized versions of some favorites." Beef Wellington is deconstructed to include tenderloin filet, seared foie gras and wild mushrooms. "We want to do everything properly," he adds, stressing an emphasis on detail, especially in his house-made pastas.

Most tables are arranged to overlook Boylston Street, providing an elevated view of one of the city's most vibrant scenes. "I would love to add a second-floor deck," Azevedo says, before acknowledging the lengthy permit process it would entail. "But just imagine being here on Marathon Monday?" Most would agree that it would be an impressive sight. Let's hope the people have their say.

Illustrated Points

Baby Talk

Ricardo Cortés is an artist, writer and publisher who grew up in Newton. He recently illustrated Go the Fk to Sleep, a children's book for adults that has landed at the top of the bestseller lists at The New York Times and Amazon.com. Cortés and author Adam Mansbach will sign copies of their story at Brookline Booksmith on July 14.

How'd you get the idea for Go the Fk to Sleep?
Adam and I have known each other since we were kids in Newton. His 2-year-old wasn't sleeping, so he put something on Facebook joking about his forthcoming children's book, and people loved the idea.

How did you decide on an illustration style?
I looked at it like I was the straight guy and he was the jokester. It became a throwback to classic children's books, with beautiful landscapes, a lot of whimsy.

Was it a challenge to get published?
I'd released children's books like these before—one about marijuana and one about terrorism. We took it to a really small publisher in Brooklyn [Akashic Books]. I think we all knew it was special.

Were you surprised that Samuel L. Jackson's Audible.com reading went viral?
When we sold the book they started asking who we wanted to read it. We were bouncing ideas around, I know Adam liked the idea of Christopher Walken. Now there's the Werner Herzog version, too.

Where is this story going to go next?
Something like Go the Fk to School would be so obvious. We don't want to do anything that easy. We are going to put out a G-rated version though. I think the story is actually intriguing to children, it's about a rebellious kid who refuses to go to sleep.

Would you read this to your child?
Well, I'm not a dad yet. I appreciate the judicious. If you can read this to your child in an affectionate way, then why not? Go for it.

Good Eats

Fat of the Land

The most popular appetizer at Charlie Redd's new Roslindale Village eatery is a mashup of the staff's snacking habits and a meal the chef/owner devoured while road-tripping in California. Slices of slightly underripe avocado—deliberately chosen for the firmer, more resilient texture—take a quick dip in tempura batter before an extended dunk in frying oil. Once their coating is lacy and crisp, the creamy, pale-green slabs are removed and drained, ready to be swiped through a cayenne-spiked buttermilk dressing.

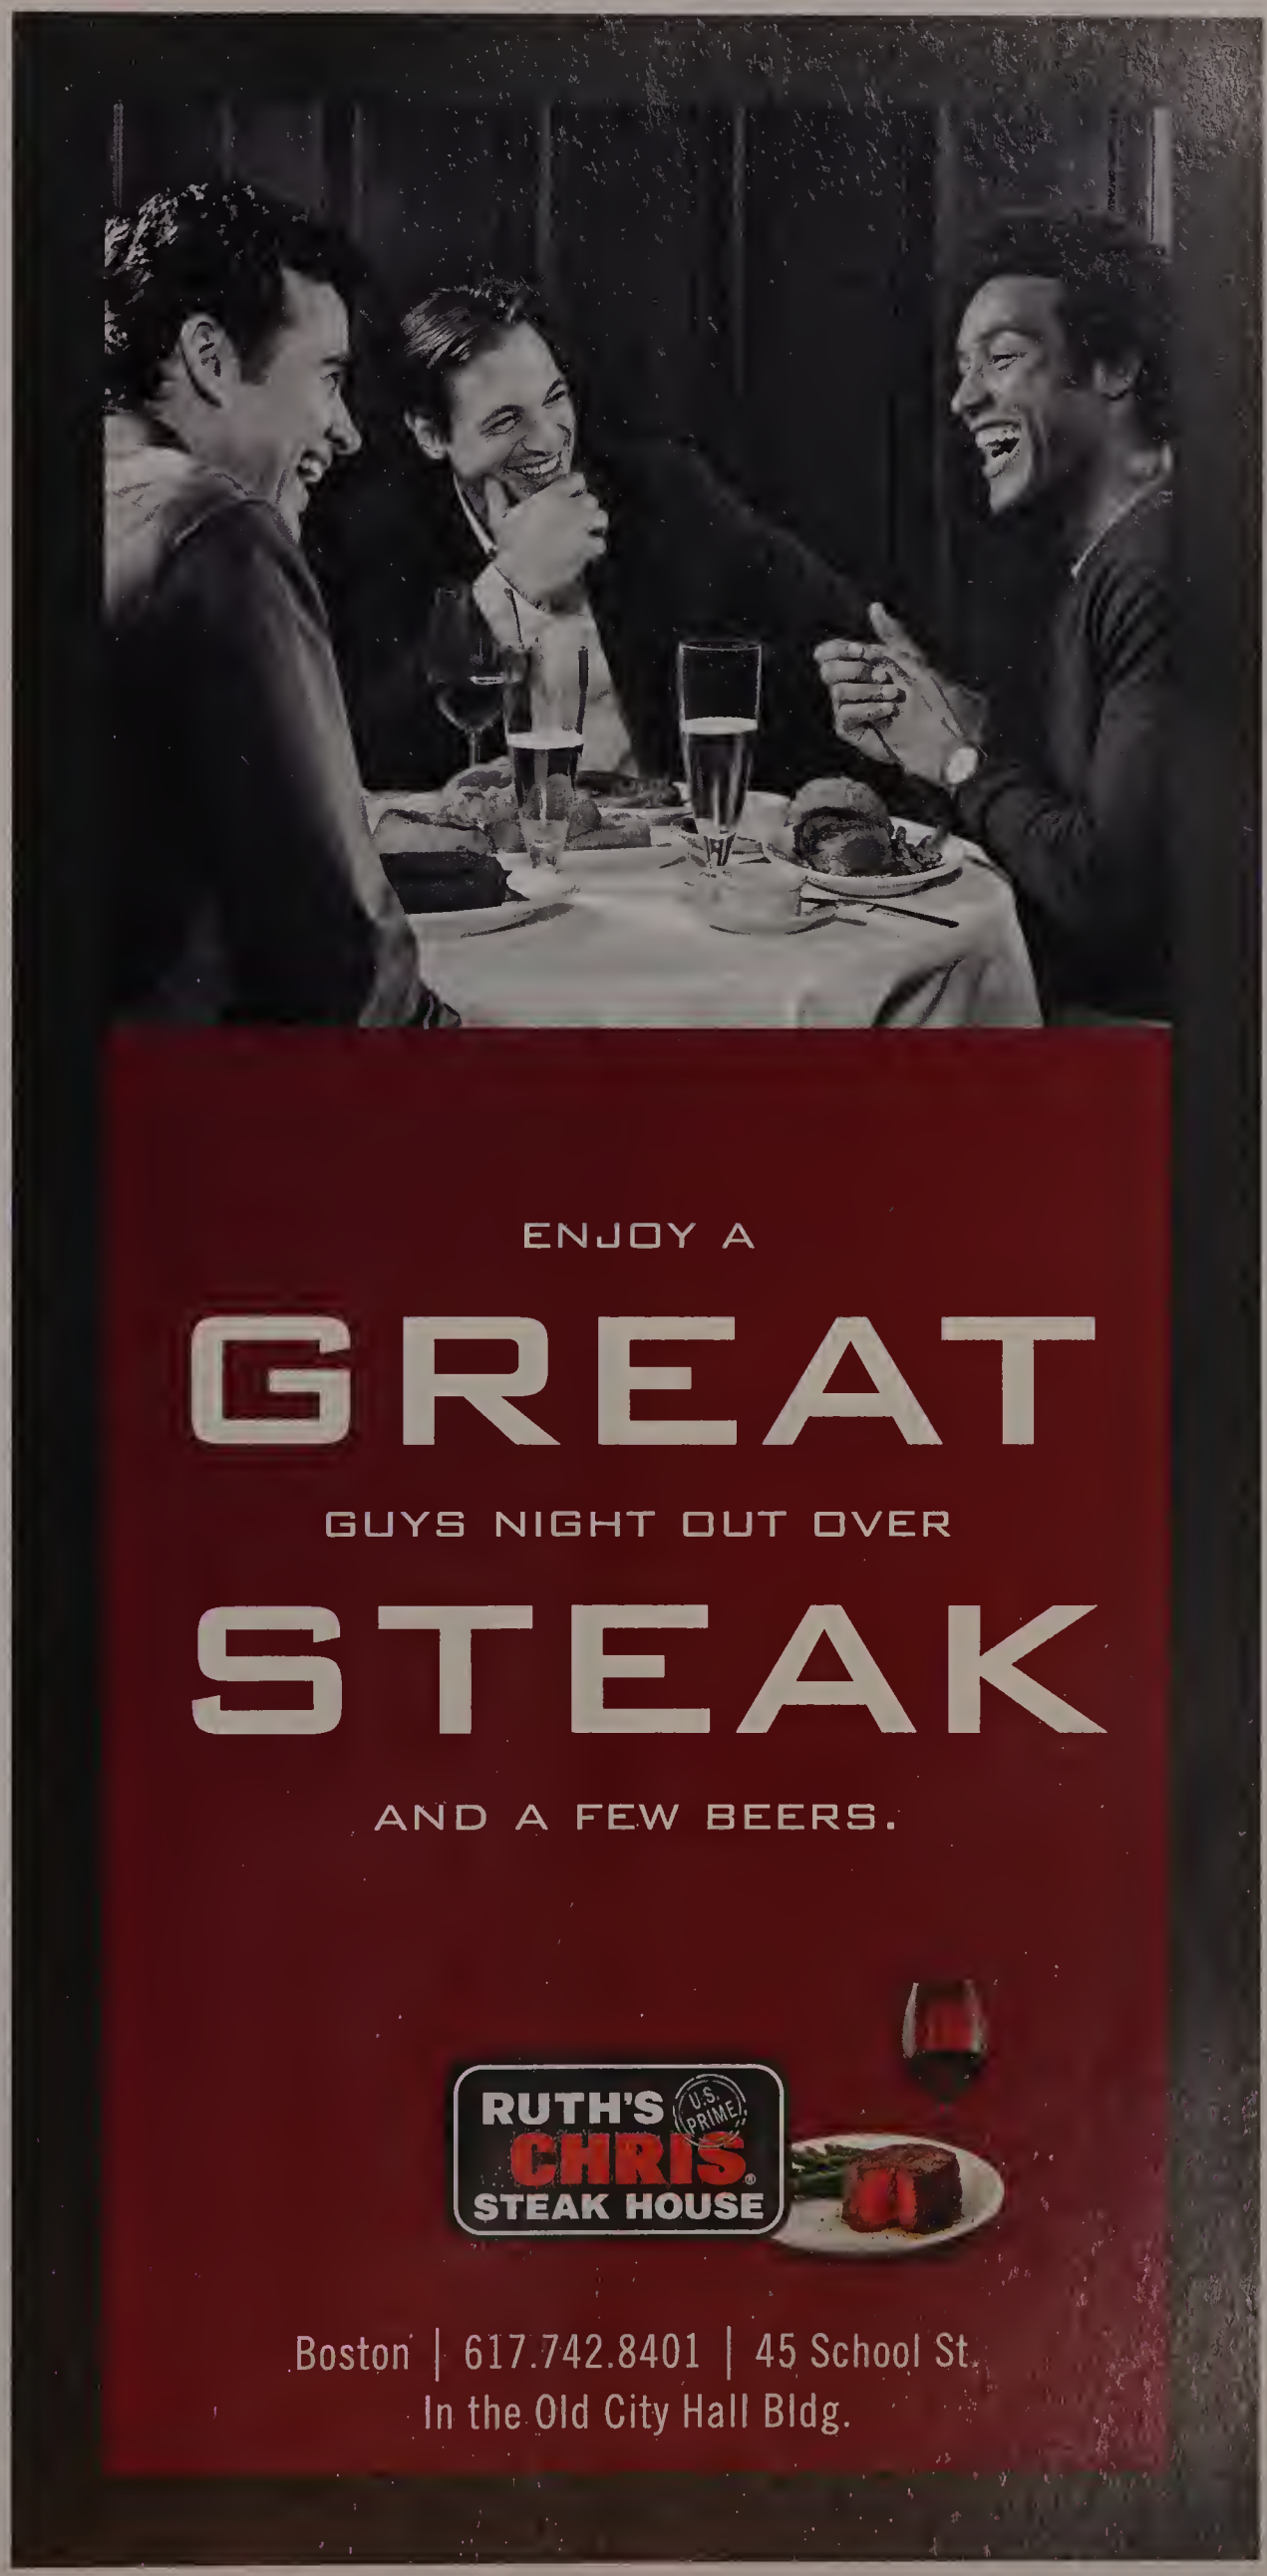
FARM TO FORK

Flights of fancy in North Andover

IN A PICKLE
Uncontained creativity



THE CHEF'S WHIM DINNER series at Smolak Farms challenges cooks with primitive facilities, but it also gives them complete freedom to create a three-course menu for 100 with no choices, no substitutions and (ideally) no complaints.

"I like the whole idea," says Paul Turano, chef/owner of Tryst in Arlington. "But I'm not doing seven courses of pig, or five shellfish courses with nuts. At the end of the day, [the diners] are paying to eat." After expenses, all the proceeds go to a charity of the chef's choosing.

"What's exciting about it is it's a real chance to represent myself," says Richmond Edes of the Beacon Hill Hotel & Bistro. Other chefs featured in the weekly series include Andy Husbands of Tremont 647, Rebecca Newell of the Beehive and Evan Mallett of Black Trumpet Bistro in Portsmouth, N.H.

ERIC GREGORY, executive chef at Grafton Street, says he's "not trying to reinvent the wheel" as he rolls out his first new menu at the 15-year-old Harvard Square spot. Through his experience at L'Espalier, Scampo and Harvest, he's sharpened his focus to create streamlined dishes pared down to four or five ingredients. Check out the pan-roasted Long Island duck breast with quinoa, swiss chard, pickled rhubarb and cherry sauce.

IN NEWTON, "homemade, authentic Taiwanese tapas" take center stage when Sweet Potato Bistro opens any day now. The so-called tapas are the kind of snacks you'd find at Taiwanese night markets: jellyfish salad, oyster omelets, steamed taro custard. If that's not substantial enough, the restaurant also offers a range of traditional Taiwanese cuisine and Chinese-American dishes.

Purveyors

Domestic Products

At Ball and Buck, the North End's hidden men's boutique, the idea is to buy less, buy better and buy American. Everything in the store is domestically crafted, like wool and linen ties hand-stitched by Nashville's Otis James. Mark Bollman, the shop's 23-year-old founder, shows a taste for the classics, with Caswell-Massey colognes and wallets from leather artisan Barrett Alley. For more timeless good looks, there are B and B's pocket T's, which can be custom-made using your favorite old shirts.

ALIA GILBERT

Drink of the Moment

Bubble Yum

The Red Lantern's Mulan-meets–Moulin Rouge vibe sets the stage for a chic and sleek bar scene with an edge. Bar manager Joe O'Connor—who created the cocktail menus at Scorpion Bar and Shrine—conceived the new hot spot's fun and experimental options. "We envision [Red Lantern] being a spot where people come for dinner but end up staying for the drinks and atmosphere," says O'Connor.

Names like Sumo Summer, Shanghai Street Sangria and the Fortune Cookie reflect a touch of Asian-inspired whimsy, but one of the more interesting items on offer is TRANQUILITY BUBBLE TEA → ($10). Unafraid to play with flavors, O'Connor combines green-tea vodka, peach and milk for a result that's lightly sweet and fruity with delicate herbal undertones. A vessel reminiscent of soda fountain glassware, adorned with a wide pastel straw, evokes a sense of yesteryear and tinges the drink's quiddity with nostalgia. Tapioca pearls rest at the bottom of the cold brew, adding texture to a new experience.

PEDAL OF HONOR

TO THE AHOLE IN THE SILVER CAR: Thanks so much for blazing by me on Belvidere Street when I was biking home around 4 pm on June 22. Shouting obscenities wasn't necessary, especially since I was abiding by all bike laws and was going the same speed as everybody else. Ten feet later, you had to slow down because of a traffic backup. I know cyclists can be a pain, but don't take out your frustration on me. Judging by the way your amorphous blob of a body was wedged in the driver's seat, I'm guessing you don't ride.

Spin doctor

To "Another disgruntled consumer" from the June 22 issue:

You say that you tried to get a seated [train] passenger's attention, but he was too self-absorbed to notice. Maybe that's because he didn't want to. I believe the appropriate course of action would have been to say: "Excuse me, sir, but I would like that seat." If you can't speak up, don't complain.

Learn how to get what you want

To this amazing city:

I moved away from Boston 10 years ago and was in New York for six of them. After receiving two overpriced degrees, enduring a failed engagement and having to celebrate the Sox' '04 and '07 victories in enemy territory, I've finally moved back. I want to thank my fellow Massholes for being themselves with their accents and hospitality, and the Bruins for welcoming me back with a championship. I'll never leave my home again.

Whether the invite says "semiformal," "black tie" or "cocktail attire," one foolproof dress can tackle all your summer weddings. A classic one-shoulder that hits just above the knee works for day, night and every dress code. Keep the neckline bare and the accessories simple.

Chances Are You've Been Sitting on a Cure for Cance

Before Lance, even before LeMond, raised cycling awareness in America, it was the Pan-Mass Challenge that implanted the "a-thon" into this nation's consciousness. Since 1980, the PMC has raised $303 million for Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. This summer, more than 5,000 PMC cyclists will raise $34 million, 100 percent of which will go to cancer research and treatment.

SPEAK, MEMORY

The past and present clash in the latest Faith Fairchild whodunit.

TWO DIVERGENT MYSTERIES percolate through the new Faith Fairchild novel. In the dreamy italics of memory, ill and aging Ursula narrates the story of a Vineyard party that occurred 70 years earlier, during which she discovered her brother Theo murdered in a gazebo.

Theo's tutor, Arnold Rowe, was falsely accused and sent to the Charles Street Jail until Ursula, then 16, boldly ventured into that grim fortress and obtained his release. She later married him. For more than half a century, the true murderer remained hidden. Then, decades later, ominous blackmail letters arrive. Sleuth (and caterer) Faith listens to Ursula's anxious tale, in which we're dropped deliciously into a long-ago Boston of Brahmin elites. The author captures the finely tuned social styles and prancing lingo of the time (clothes are "glad rags"), as well as the ecstatic celebration on the Vineyard during Illumination Night. The parallel mystery involves Faith's minister husband and money pilfered from the church. Modern Cambridge comes alive here with a hip and current sensibility. An added spice: recipes from Faith's kitchen. ×××

FROM PAGE 188: "Ursula walked down West Cedar Street toward her aunt's house on Louisburg Square. She felt as if she had passed from one world to another, and was struck by how normal things looked in this one. The people she passed nodded and smiled slightly. The old, wavy amethyst glass in the windows of the Beacon Hill houses were unchanged, the brass door knockers and handles as bright as the day they were installed. The brick sidewalks uneven from years of use. Cars passed slowly. It was all as it had been before she'd rung the bell at the Charles Street Jail, but it would never be the same for her again."

MORE BESTER

A bonus Boston's Best bonanza

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

To the greatestest!

AS YOU ARE SURELY aware, this is the Boston's Best issue—obviously the most thorough compendium of things that are the best heretofore assembled by human hands. I daresay it even stands as the best of the Bests. Yet I always strive for improvement. I eat excellence, wash it down with a tall glass of perfection, gargle with superiority and brush my teeth with raging ambition. And that's why I've decided to refine this prestigious issue by creating my own Best list.

This is my chance to express my own personal opinion on matters large and small (something that's hard for people to do these days). While the regular categories are jury-selected and carefully deliberated, my addendum can make no such claims. It should not be interpreted as even remotely useful, and should probably be torn out and held above the magazine as a parasol, so as to prevent harmful ultraviolet light from damaging the more valuable sections. Enjoy.

BEST LOOK: To the guy who rides past my house every morning on a ten-speed, wearing cutoff jean shorts and usually no shirt. He rides with no hands, sitting upright, smoking a cigarette. He cycles past on a regular schedule, which initially made me think that he commutes to work. But then I started wondering what kind of job has a jorts/no-shirt dress code. I mean, that's what I'm wearing right now, but it's casual Friday.

BEST MALAPROP: To my wife, for calling me "dumb as a doornail." Don't you mean "dead as a doornail?" I asked. She replied that doornails are also dumb. I can't disagree with this.

BEST AWKWARD RESPONSE: To me, for my response to my mother-in-law's well-wishes on Father's Day. She said, "Thanks for giving me such a wonderful grandson." My response: "Uh... my pleasure?"

SECOND-BEST AWKWARD RESPONSE: Also to me. My neighbor showed me a photo of her three daughters, who range in age from 14 to 19. They were all pretty, but I'm not sure how an adult guy is supposed to react to a photo of someone's teenage girls. I mean, would it be weird if I said, "What a bunch of babes!" or would that be a compliment? It's the first time I've been in this situation. Whatever the case, I'm positive you shouldn't say what I actually said: "Which one's 14 and which one's 19?"

BEST STEVEN WRIGHT JOKE ABOUT A LAZY SUSAN: And the winner is: the joke I thought up while pondering whether to toss the lazy Susan that's collecting dust in our basement.

So here's what Steven Wright would say about that: "My lazy Susan broke the other day. I was going to fix it, but I didn't have the energy." Feel free to use that, Mr. Wright.

While we're on the topic, it's a little-known fact that the lazy Susan was independently conceived by two inventors at about the same time. But the second inventor brought the product to market too late, and by that point the name had already become famous. That's why Susan, lazy as she was, became an overnight millionaire, while the industrious inventor of the Short-Arm Sally is buried in a pauper's cemetery.

BEST THING ABOUT THE BRUINS' $157,000 FOXWOODS BAR TAB: The one bottle of complimentary Champagne. I'm sure we've all gawked at the Bruins' exorbitant bill, but the thing that stands out to me is not the $100,000 bottle of Champagne they ordered; it's the free bottle they were comped at some point before that. I mean, free Champagne? I thought I was jealous of the Bruins players before, and now this. These hockey guys waltz into a bar carrying the Stanley Cup, and all of a sudden people are just giving them a whole bottle of Champagne. For free. I'll bet those guys were kicking themselves the next morning, because if they'd spent $300,000, they probably could've gotten two bottles of free Champagne. You've gotta spend money to make money.

BEST HOMOPHONES: Hey/hay. Next time you drive past a field of hay, yell, "Hay!" The other people in the car will ask, "What?" because they think you mean "hey." Then you point at the bales of straw and repeat, "Hay." Then everyone has a good laugh over the absurdity of the English language.

It is my hope—nay, my fervent determination—that these important selections will help you live a fuller and more rewarding life, or else I have failed. But I know that I haven't. Because I'm the best. ✖✖✖

BEING BETHENNY

How one woman turned 15 minutes of fame into an empire

BY KYLE WRIGHT

HERE'S THE SKINNY: Bethenny Frankel first entered the homes of reality gawkers during her stint on The Apprentice: Martha Stewart. She came in second in the 2005 finale—and received a sharp-tongued send-off from the Mistress of White Sales—but you probably don't remember that. The show was a flop. She should have faded into the darkest recesses of human memory, forgotten in a sea of Flavor of Love contestants and American Idol rejects. But six years later, the former BU student's star has never been brighter.

Reality TV was still a budding phenomenon in that pre-Snooki era, its cast members rarely afforded more than the standard 15 minutes after they'd made their exit (save for a few Survivors who extended their lifespan by releasing sex tapes or spouting off on The View). Bethenny didn't follow her elimination by landing a bit role in a Rob Schneider movie or trying to become a pop star. She returned to her vocation as a natural-foods chef for clients like Tommy Hilfiger. It wasn't until 2008 that she resurfaced on The Real Housewives of New York City as the flailing entrepreneur/BFF of fabric doyenne Jill Zarin, with a boyfriend who wouldn't commit and ovaries aching for a baby.

Oh, what a difference three years has made. Viewers connected with Frankel's headstrong ambition and unhinged emotions. Though in her late 30s at the time, she was the embodiment of a doe-eyed dreamer, a woman with a no-nonsense exterior, a quick wit and a flawed core. Over the course of her three seasons, she lost a great deal (including her friendship with Zarin) and hid nothing (America has seen this woman urinate on at least two occasions). Her biting comments about her costars, particularly Kelly Killoren Bensimon, made her the comic relief and fan favorite. Not even Bravo honcho Andy Cohen's staff of fortune-tellers could have known that Frankel's quip comparing Bensimon to Madonna would escalate to a rumble at the Brass Monkey and an all-out war in St. John.

Housewives was never just a side project for Frankel; it was also a tool to market her brand, Skinnygirl. Her best-selling books and cocktail prompted Bravo to give her a spin-off chronicling her new life as a mother and wife. (The third season is currently in production.) Bethenny Ever After lacks the bitchiness of Housewives, dwelling instead on Frankel's sensitive side. This is particularly evident in her often brutal therapy sessions with Dr. Xavier Amador, where the talk typically touches on the scars from her broken childhood: Her father was a thoroughbred trainer who was too preoccupied to parent and her mother also failed to take much of an interest, a family history that's been one of the show's central dramas. Intrigued by her neuroses and her honesty, fans keep tuning in to watch her fail and succeed in a tug-of-war that she finally seems to be winning. It's a long way to have come for a former Paradise Rock Club waitress.

The past year has seen Frankel turn 40, take the silver in Skating With the Stars, embark on a multi-city speaking tour and be psychoanalyzed on 20/20. Her biggest news, of course, is that she sold her signature margarita-in-a-bottle for a reported $120 million to Beam Global Spirits & Wine, Inc. Now there are whispers of an Ellen DeGeneres–backed talk show, plus the promise of other Skinnygirl cocktail varieties. No matter what's next, the woman seems committed to always topping her own personal "Best." ☛

Soroff On BETHENNY FRANKEL

The reality TV star and margarita mogul talks about babies, body fat and saying yes.

THE FINER THINGS
Bethenny with hubby Jason Hoppy

Jonathan Soroff: So now that you're Queen of All Media, do you have anything to say to Howard Stern?
Bethenny Frankel: Well, his ex-wife lives in my old house. We sold it to them.

If someone doesn't recognize you, how do you identify yourself—entrepreneur, TV star, author, chef?
Businesswoman.

Do you think prison softened Martha Stewart?
I do not think prison softened her. No.

You're never shown exercising on your show. How come you look so good? Is there a work-out regimen you're hiding from us?
No. I walk around. We do a lot of things outdoors. I do the elliptical machine. I do that probably two, three times a week while watching Gossip Girl or reality television for 30 minutes. But consistency is the key. If you're consistently exercising your whole life, you don't ever have to do boot camp or spinning or anything psychotic.

How does it feel to be part of an acronym: RHONY?
Well, I'm no longer part of that acronym. Now I'm part of BEA: Bethenny Ever After. I love it. I love lingo. It's so familiar to people that they now give it a nickname.

Will you ever talk to Jill again?
Um… I'm sure I'll run into her and say hello. I wouldn't not say hello.

If I showed up at your house unannounced, what would you make me to eat?
Who said I'd make you something to eat? I might make you a drink. I'd probably pour you a Skinnygirl margarita. That would probably be the most exciting for you. And maybe I'd put out some whole wheat tortilla chips and guacamole, or cheese and salami or bresaola, marcona almonds. I'd make something look impressive that wasn't, and it wouldn't take a long time.

You always leave something on your plate. How do you eat just half a hot dog?
Maybe I would eat three-quarters of a hotdog and just leave a bite, just for the sake of knowing that I've left something, because part of my philosophy is that you should never eat everything. But I don't think [someone] could stop at half a hot dog. I think it would need to be more like four-fifths.

So what part of having a camera trained on you 24/7 seemed like a good idea to you?
It's not 24/7, and there's no part of it that isn't annoying. The only part that isn't annoying is when we go to restaurants I haven't been to before, or to a premiere.

Isn't this whole thing astonishingly narcissistic?
Maybe it's narcissistic. I have no idea. But it's not like I gave myself my own show. Bravo gave it to me. So maybe it's just delusional.

Can I be your new BFF?
My new Bethenny Frankel Fan, to use another acronym? Sure.

Favorite seduction dish to make for your husband?
I don't have any particular dishes. The fact that I cook should be seduction enough. And I cook a lot, every night.

How about the criticism that you're promoting an unrealistic body image?
No one criticizes me about that. Skinnygirl's not about weight. It's about being healthy and fun and flirty and the life of the party, and feeling good about yourself. But you can be anywhere from a size 2 to a size 12.

Is it true that nothing tastes as good as skinny feels?
No. Skinny feels unhealthy. I don't think skinny is a good thing to promote, and I don't.

So are you intent on total world domination?
No. I don't think like that.

What do you do to make your husband not feel like Mr. Bethenny Frankel?
I married someone who's a really secure person, so I don't think he'd ever feel that way.

Did you win anything on the Kentucky Derby?
I didn't bet, and I didn't even know it was going on because it was the same day as my daughter's first birthday. So I wasn't even paying attention. I don't even know who was in it.

Did you ever go to Marylou Whitney's ball in Saratoga growing up?
No. I wasn't part of the fancy part of the racetrack. I was a hot walker in the morning and hung out at the barn on the back side.

So how much of the supposed $120 million you got for Skinnygirl did you actually get to keep?
I don't talk about money with strangers.

You worked as a PA on the show Saved By the Bell. How much nookie do you think went on behind the scenes?
I heard a lot, or a good amount, but I wasn't part of any of that.

Did you ever see Screech's porn video?
Aaaah, no. [Laughs.]

Was Skating With the Stars the hardest physical thing you've ever done?
Yes, it was. That and The Apprentice.

"People told me that Skinnygirl would never work. You will be told no, and you're ultimately alone to make decisions."

Physically or mentally?
They're both excruciating torture. Just unhealthy and unnatural and not something that anyone should have to endure.

What was the hardest part?
With Skating, I had a new baby, I was traveling back and forth across the country—while shooting my own television show, while negotiating the sale of my company, while being a brand-new newlywed. I was 40 years old, doing an abnormal amount of physical activity, every single day. It was brutal. And the mental competitiveness—I wanted to give up because I hated it, but I'm too tenacious, so I just had to keep doing it. And it was sheer torture. I didn't sleep at all. The Apprentice is a sleep-deprivation experiment during which you have to do very sharp mental tasks.

In reality, do you think of yourself as a star?
No. I think of myself as a smart businessperson.

What do you always keep in your fridge?
Skinnygirl margaritas, Parmesan cheese, pureed baby-foods for Bryn and soy milk.

How do you stay thin with a kid around?
I don't know how anyone could not be thin with a baby. It always takes precedence—they want to eat and you come second. It's exhausting.

Did anybody say they hated you for snapping back to a size 4 within moments of giving birth?
No. They love me because I explain how it's possible. That you don't binge while pregnant, nor before, and that if you're always consistent about health, it doesn't have to be some fire drill to lose weight.

BABE IN ARMS Bryn and Bethenny

What's the one thing you want readers to take away from your book, A Place of Yes?
That anything is possible. That my life was filled with nos. But I had to stand up for what I believed. People told me that doing The Real Housewives was a terrible idea. People told me that Skinnygirl would never work. You will be told no, and you're ultimately alone to make decisions. And don't ever believe anyone's smarter than you, no matter what their job title is, or what their bank account says. It's all up to you, and anything's possible. All roads lead to Rome. ×××

The Improper Bostonian

BOSTON'S BEST 2011

EXCESS IS HUMAN. Why else do people chase gold medals, world records and Kim Kardashian? Our appetite for superlatives is insatiable. Hence the theme of this issue, our annual Boston's Best. In it, we applaud the finest the city has to offer in food, drink, shopping, culture and services. Doing this is no small task. We're blessed with a wealth of world-class businesses, the greatest hospitals and schools in the country and, of course, the glorious Bruins (not to mention the Red Sox, Patriots and Celtics). Bostonians are spoiled for choice.

TO MAKE OUR SELECTIONS, we assembled a group of well-informed judges from all walks of life and every conceivable area of expertise. Then we wined and dined them at hot spot Strega on the Waterfront while making them fill out an extensive ballot. Our editorial staff tabulated the votes, took potential conflicts of interest into account and threw in their own two cents. And voilà! The Improper's 2011 Boston's Best issue.

WE'RE SURE YOU'LL AGREE with some of our choices and disagree (passionately enough to write in) with others. Please do. It's just a reminder of how lucky we are to live in a town where worthy steak houses battle for supremacy, bartenders woo us with their latest creations and our neighbors are just as experienced, wise and opinionated as we are.

FOOD & DRINK

LUNCH

MYERS + CHANG

THERE'S SOMETHING here for every variation of Asian-food craving. Must-haves from the dinner service include tea-smoked ribs, wok-roasted mussels and Indonesian nasi goring, while dim sum go-tos include pork belly buns and pot stickers. If your idea of lunch necessarily comes between two slices of bread, try the short rib–with–Asian pear banh mi, washed down with a glass of sweet, house-made cherry-ginger soda. And no one should miss the delectable Chinese chicken salad.

AFTERNOON TEA
Bristol Lounge

Bostonians know a thing or two about throwing a tea party, but none so refined as the kind put on by the Bristol Lounge. Sink into the upholstered furniture, sip the brew of your choice (or, if you want the regal upgrade, a kir royale), and indulge in a tiered platter of dainty finger foods—scones with jam, lemon curd and Devonshire cream; crustless sandwiches filled with cucumber, chicken and egg salad—while taking in the view of the Public Garden.

AMERICAN Citizen Public House and Oyster Bar

Long before Citizen Public House took shape in the shadow of Fenway Park, the folks behind this wildly popular feeding ground had mastered high-end tavern fare at their various Franklin Cafe locations (see Neighborhoods: South Boston). With their newest venture, they bring craft cocktails, dozens of whiskeys and a roast suckling pig for 10, complete with chilled shellfish and seasonal sides.

BAGELS
Rosenfeld Bagels

The toughest trial for any bagel baker is the dreaded "visit from an opinionated New Yorker" test. But Rosenfeld continues to send them away happy (or at least quieter). The rings are so crisp on the outside and chewy within, you might even consider skipping the toaster. The rest of the tiny shop is stocked with all your go-to brunch components: a generous spread of schmears, smoked fish, and stacks of hot-from-the-oven challah in raisin, seeded, plain and whole wheat.

CHARCUTERIE
COPPA

WE DARE YOU to find a fine-dining menu in this town that doesn't sport a charcuterie plate. And while we don't mean to sound cynical (preserving meat not only makes good kitchen sense, it's a delicious way for chefs to show off their pet projects), not every platter of country pâté and prosciutto is worth its salt. Chef Jamie Bissonnette's offerings, however, are not to be missed: stunning red slivers of duck prosciutto, rich lardo and, of course, gorgeously gelatinous coppa di testa, to name a few.

BAKERY
Flour Bakery + Cafe

It's been about a year since Joanne Chang opened "F3" in Cambridge, and roughly 18 months since her first cookbook debuted. It appears her business and baking savvy is paying off handsomely. Not only are the lines as long as ever at all three Flour locations, but the sweets diva has signed on for another book deal. Her second tome, due out in spring 2013, will focus on the savory side of the biz, hopefully cluing fans into the secrets of her killer curry tuna salad and the tomato chutney in her roast lamb sandwich.

BAR FOOD
Poe's Kitchen at the Rattlesnake

At most inexpensive watering holes on Boylston Street, beer pitchers and party music are partnered with bland platters of nachos, chicken fingers and mozzarella sticks. At the Rattlesnake, however, chef Brian Poe takes Tex-Mex standards and enlivens them with bold pops of flavor and unusual ingredients. There's a tequila cream cheese that accompanies lime-zested tortilla chips, made-to-order spicy guacamole, and chipotle wings rubbed with smoked jalapeños ready to be dunked in poblano–blue cheese sauce. It's booze-soaking fare that's anything but generic.

384 BOYLSTON ST., BOSTON | 617-059-7772 | RATTLESNAKEBAR.COM

BARBECUE

Formaggio Kitchen

Not many people think of their local cheese shop when they're jonesing for brisket, but Formaggio Kitchen has always been much more than a source for rare French bleus. Line up early on Saturdays for grill master Eric's dry-rubbed pork ribs, gorgeously charred chicken quarters, huge Pearl hot dogs in hollowed-out baguettes, cumin-scented baked beans and the always-sells-out pulled-lamb sandwich on brioche.

244 HURON AVE., CAMBRIDGE | 617-354-4750 | FORMAGGIOKITCHEN.COM

BISTRO

Gaslight Brasserie

French bistro menus can lose their novelty after the umpteenth onion soup gratinée and steak frites. Gaslight, however, remains in vogue. From his South End kitchen, chef Chris Robins prepares the classics as well as more inspired plates: asparagus and goat cheese salad with wildflower honey, local clams roasted with pork sausage, and Tuesday night's Sichuan take on roast duck with peppercorn sauce.

560 HARRISON AVE., BOSTON | 617-422-0224 | GASLIGHT560.COM

BREAD

CLEAR FLOUR BREAD

BLACK SESAME STICKS with herbed garlic are one of the cruel temptations just out of reach of the patrons queuing for entry into this diminutive storefront. Besides daily offerings like crusty baguettes and buckwheat-walnut loaves, check the weekly schedule to see what artisan bakers Christy Timon and Abe Faber have rising. Options include pumpernickel on Wednesdays, dense German vollkornbrot on Fridays and Saturdays, and soft pretzels (recommended warm with mustard butter) on Sundays.

178 THORNDIKE ST., BROOKLINE | 617-739-0060 | CLEARFLOURBREAD.COM

BREAKFAST

Mike's City Diner

The breakfast plates at this South End institution are, to put it mildly, hearty. Load up on hash and eggs, grits, ham carved off the bone, hot linguiça or, for the most daring, the Intensive Care: a three-egg, 10-ounce sirloin special. Fortunately, the food is so good it's worth the caloric intake—and, well, Boston Medical Center is right around the corner.

BURGER

Craigie on Main

You want the Craigie burger? It's not easy to find. In fact, it's not even listed on the menu anymore. After popularity skyrocketed last year, chef/owner Tony Maws couldn't meet the demand due to the limited resources from prestigious small-scale supplier Hardwick Beef. (His recent James Beard Award doesn't help matters, either.) But don't fret. The carefully calibrated patty—short rib, flat meat, brisket, suet, bone marrow and dehydrated miso paste—is still available. You just have to ask. Don't get complacent, though; Maws only makes about 20 per day, so go on the early side of dinner (or brunch) service.

So Joey ran across the ocean, looking for his big chance. His legs grew firm and thick, and his shell grew big and strong. And then, one day, his big chance came! A special boat dropped a box down just for him! He hopped inside, and rode all the way to the big city, where Joey finally did become famous – as a crab cake at Legal Sea Foods! SAUSAGE

The Haven

Under antler-chandeliers, JP hipsters pack Jason Waddleton's super-cool Scottish restaurant to swig Belhaven over haggis with neeps and tatties. But more adventurous souls skip the tamer haggis in favor of house-made blood sausage. Jammed with rich, black paste instead of filler like oats or rice, it arrives on a bed of grilled asparagus, topped with a fried egg—an inspired combination of textures and tastes. Don't miss the annual Sausage Fest and Ladies Night for the kitchen's versions of Cumberland and hunter's sausages.

SEAFOOD
Island Creek Oyster Bar

It's not every year that Boston welcomes a stellar seafood restaurant. But when Skip Bennett and chef Jeremy Sewall partnered with restaurateur Garrett Harker to take over the old Great Bay space, they aimed higher than opening just another luxury raw bar. They created a grand stage for Bennett's Duxbury-based aquaculture business—making this a true farm-to-table establishment that serves only the most immaculate mollusks. The crowds come in for family recipes like Bennett's grilled and garlic-buttered razor clams and cousin Mark Sewall's Maine-caught lobsters with fresh pasta ribbons.

Hungry Mother

The darling of Cambridge since its opening in 2008, this southern belle continues to capture the hearts of Yankees, clinching titles like this year's Boston Globe Munch Madness championship. Reserve early for summertime specials like grilled local squid with pickled peppers and cornmeal-fried softshells with pea greens and watermelon. But note that seasonal hours mean the kitchen's only cooking from Wednesday to Sunday.

The original Strega on Hanover Street has long been wallpapered with snapshots of stars posing with larger-than-life restaurateur Nick Varano. His latest, more conspicuous Waterfront iteration ups the flash factor for celebs looking for pappardelle and a party. Case in point: After announcing his retirement, it's where Shaquille O'Neal bid Boston adieu at a star-studded bash with girlfriend Nicole "Hoopz" Alexander.

STEAK HOUSE
Grill 23

In judging a steak house, the sides, the beverage program and the beefless entrees all come into play. But really, what's most important is a perfectly cooked slab of red meat. Here, it's all sourced from boutique producer Brandt Beef, a family-owned, sustainability-minded operation that provides the serious cuts for Grill 23's dry-aged rib eye, bone-in Delmonico and mammoth 24-ounce porterhouse. For a less dressed-up affair, go for a cocktail and an order of skirt steak frites at the bar.

There are many reasons to fall in love with Silvertone: cracker-crusted crocks of gooey mac 'n' cheese, inexpensive, quality tipples and laid-back yet attentive service. SUBURBAN
51 Lincoln

At 51 Lincoln, a melon is not a summertime snack, but rather the "protein" in chef Jeff Fournier's signature watermelon steak appetizer. The pink fruit gets a pan sear before a dressing of eggplant "chicharron," cherry tomato confit, French feta and parsley. It's this witty attitude toward fresh ingredients that makes the restaurant a welcome neighborhood spot for suburbanites, and worth a detour for city dwellers. It's now open for lunch, too, so you can order the outstanding Cambodian Mahi Mahi Amok without having to wait for sundown.

Bargain sushi doesn't have the cost-cutting appeal of, say, a soup-and-sandwich combo. Rather than play Russian roulette with raw seafood, hit this polished Back Bay option for schools of upmarket—but still affordable—makimono (try the Torch toro roll sharpened with jalapeño). There's also an array of tempura and an impressive nigiri roster: pickled mackerel, escolar and giant clams, to name a few.

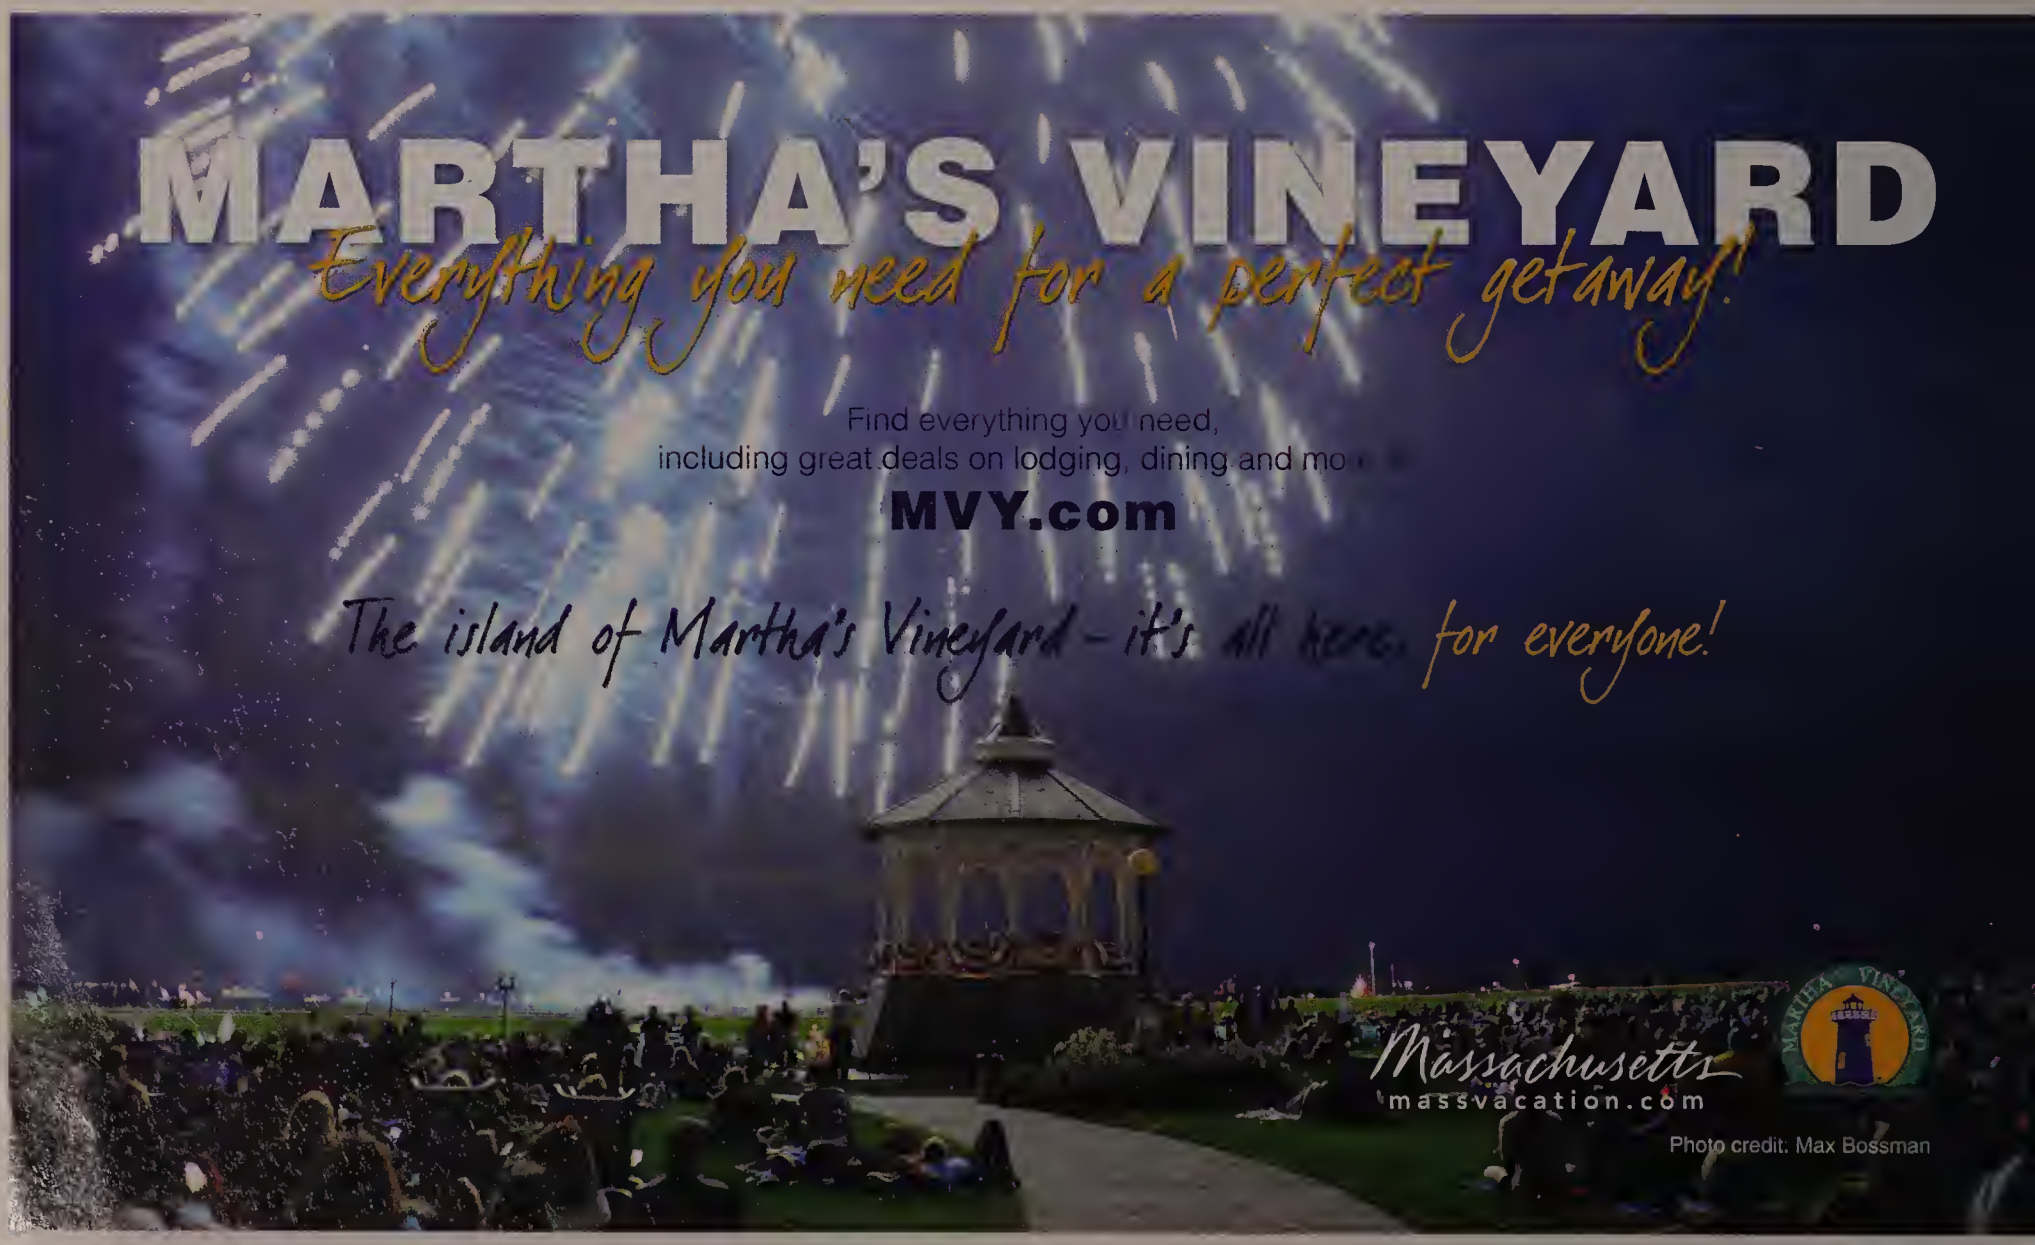
TAPAS
Toro



It was hard enough to pick from the charred pimientos del Padron, the griddled gambas and the famous corn. With an ever-changing menu of options, the question arises of how to cram all those little plates onto one table. What to choose? Crispy pork terrine with charred ramps and kimchi aioli? Thai-style tripe-and-pork stew? Better bring extra company to this multifaceted favorite, where sharing plates is a practice too often honored in the breach.

Recently, it's been hard to walk through Harvard Square without stopping by Clover's first brick-and-mortar outpost to grab a chickpea-fritter sandwich and house-made soda. The pita sandwiches, salads and drinks infused with real fruit and herbs make Clover trucks—now at Dewey Square and Government Center, in addition to Kendall Square—an inexpensive refueling post. Added bonus: The Harvard Square location pours draft beers from local craft breweries such as Pretty Things and Peak Organic. A perfect match for a batch of rosemary fries.

Yes, Pho Hoa is a chain, but this is a good thing—more opportunities to come across their consistently great (and wonderfully inexpensive) roster of traditional Vietnamese pho. Given its North End surroundings, it should be no surprise that this historic wine shop has an epic selection of hard-to-find Italian wines. But under the direction of owner Kerri Platt, who took over in 2008, the shop focuses on selling small-production vinos from all around the world—meaning Burgundies, riojas and sakes get attention, too. Ned Devine's

Ned Devine's isn't just another downtown bar. It's a capacious entity that manager Mike Thomas says is designed to provide "three different atmospheres." There's the Irish bar, tricked out with woodwork imported from across the Atlantic; a more laid-back lounge; and the club, where live bands play every weekend to an audience of college kids and professionals still young enough to act the part. Regardless of where you stand, you'll find a space offering exactly what you're looking for.

Towne Stove and Spirits

It's hard to slap a label on Towne's two street-level bars. They have the walk-in accessibility of a neighborhood spot combined with the cachet provided by a big-time trio: developer Pat Lyons and mega-chefs Jasper White and Lydia Shire. And there's a nifty craft cocktail list replete with whimsical touches—the Gypsy Dancer ("popular with the ladies," says one bartender) is rimmed with honey crystals dispensed from a plastic Chinatown honeybear. The bar food is, of course, extraordinary. Lobster popovers, topped with succulent chunks of shellfish, are drizzled with Lyle's Golden Syrup. It's no wonder the place draws well-dressed flocks of the comfortably unattached.

Hillstone

It's not just the downtown location that pulls in waves of thirsty office workers. According to general manager Tom Allen, "Our bartenders and servers are the friendliest faces in Boston." Three hours of free validated parking after 3:30 pm (and just $5 for additional time) makes it easy to meet up for a drink, and there's a six-table patio for soaking in a weekday's last rays.

In the evening, sure, go for the requisite Guinness, but don't miss one of the city's most underappreciated burgers. There are traditional Irish sessions and a weekly DJ night. Chatting with staff members named Mikey or Colm, remind yourself there's a difference between an Irish bar and a plastic Paddy pub. Happily, you're in the right one.

LESBIAN SCENE

Milky Way Lounge at Bella Luna Restaurant

When GM/co-owner Carol Downs talks about the scene at the Milky Way, the word "community" comes up a lot. Describing the monthly Dyke Night, she says, "It's just packed—a great dance night for the community." Sexy and Sophisticated, featured on the second Thursday of each month, is another popular event with "a really strong core audience" that appreciates the

PLACE TO DRINK ALONE
Noir

Shadowy hotel bars are settings built for storytelling. Dim corners harbor traveling intelligentsia, lounge-loving academics and abundant possibility. The bar lights provide a spotlight in the darkness, where a secluded customer is free to tie the strings of the evening's plot together while ruminating over cocktails like the Black Dahlia or White Heat. Maybe it's not what Marlowe would drink, but it's where his night would begin.

PLACE TO (RE-) CAPTURE YOUTH
Daisy Buchanan's

As the convertibles hit Newbury and the hems of summer dresses elevate a few more inches, a certain kind of romance hangs in the air. Silver foxes and their arm candy make this Back Bay stalwart their natural habitat, while the patio is a great place to take in the street scene. Important to know: Daisy's is cash-only. For half the guests, that shouldn't be a concern.

PLACE TO DRINK LIKE A CHEF
TASTY BURGER

AFTER A LONG, HOT NIGHT in the kitchen, many local chefs reach for a tall cold one. For Coppa's Jamie Bissonnette, Budweiser does the trick. Will Gilson, formerly of Garden at the Cellar, opts for a 'Gansett. High Life–living Chris Coombs of Deuxave is another regular. On late weekend nights when Coombs "can't stand the crowd in Chinatown," Tasty Burger plates up his bacon cheeseburger with mushrooms and chipotle aioli even as the clock nears 2 am. Think of it as a hipper "Nighthawks," with chili dogs.

MIXOLOGIST / JOY RICHARD

RICHARD'S LOVE AFFAIR with bartending started back when she was 19 years old and waiting tables. "Occasionally, they'd throw me behind the bar," she recalls. "I just loved it." Years of experience later, Richard leads the charge at Citizen Public House, where her creations have attracted a devoted following of cocktail cognoscenti. She's a founding member of LUPEC (Ladies United for the Preservation of Endangered Cocktails), a veteran of Tremont 647 and the Franklin Cafe troika, and currently a vocal proponent of cognac and tiki drinks. So what's bartender's choice this summer? "Punches," she says. "Sherry drinks, dry vermouth drinks, Aperol and St-Germain." Richard has your work cut out for you. Better work up a thirst.

Halftime Pizza

Feeling peckish before the big game? Fortify yourself with a waxed-paper cup of beer and a cheap slice. Unsurprisingly, this family business is always packed at peak times, but service is fast. If you want to skip the pie, chow down on aptly named sandwiches (Slap Shot, Penalty Box), and check out the nine wide-screens to feed your team spirit.

POST-TD GARDEN
The Greatest Bar

If it's too early to head home, what are your West End options? A pub to toast the victory? A dance floor to work off the nachos? Or a sports bar to catch the replay of the game you've just attended? Leaping to clear the (extremely high) bar its name sets, the Greatest Bar delivers all three scenarios on four levels, right across the street from the TD Garden. Should a floor not meet your criteria for fun, just keep walking up the stairs.

SPORTS BAR
Jerry Remy's Sports Bar & Grill

As a second baseman, Jerry Remy didn't earn too many accolades. As a brand, the Rem Dawg is surging. In addition to commentator and pitchman, he's added sports bar czar to his resume, with three locations, including this spot around the corner from Fenway. Food is pub fare (wings, wraps, a burger sandwiched between fried dough). Rooftop seating is on the way. But the biggest draw (besides the man himself, available for photo ops, of course) is the 32 TVs and two truly mammoth screens, prompting long lines on game nights.

The Patio at Dillon's

Newly raised to street level, the Dillon's patio now matches the interior expanse and carries the distinction of being the biggest in the Back Bay. Replete with flowers, lanterns and umbrellas, the 85-seat oasis is a draw in summer weather (and fully equipped with outdoor heaters for colder nights). Humming when the Sox are in town and offering al fresco dining until the stroke of midnight, it's an ideal open-air option for before, during or after the game.

Aged Cocktails

The idea of barrel-aging booze to produce richer flavors works wonders for certain spirits. But cocktails stored for weeks taste lifeless, and a vigorous quake in a shaker fails to resuscitate the flavors. The fad began with mixologists in London and New York, and is practiced locally at reliable watering holes like Drink. Former Temple Bar bar manager Hugh Reynolds says the process makes one mean Negroni. Maybe. To keep the smiles on our faces, though, we'll stick to the fresh hard stuff.

NEIGHBORHOODS

ALLSTON

Deep Ellum

A near-instant classic, this four-year-old tavern (named for the Deep Elm arts district in Dallas, hometown of co-owner Aaron Sanders) combines forward-thinking food (root beer–braised pork belly, the "best wurst" plate) with timeless drinks (Hemingway daiquiris, aviations and seven versions of the Manhattan). A deck reinforces its status as the neighborhood champ.

BACK BAY

Parish Cafe

Something old, something new, something borrowed. That formula has given Gordon Wilcox more success than most marriages attain, making him the patriarch of a restaurant empire (eight spots, including this one, the Rattlesnake and Bukowski's). For almost 20 years, Parish has dished up a menu of sandwiches created by celebrity chefs to a casual, bustling after-work crowd drawn by nearly 100 beers and fresh confections, like a prickly pear margarita.

BEACON HILL

The Sevens

Come early, come late, come often. The darts garner more attention than the food, but the beer, not surprisingly, is top-tier, including a house-brand Harpoon. Occupying the Charles Street site for nearly three-quarters of a century, most of it spent under the kind and generous hand of owner Jack Kiley, the Sevens is the best kind of neighborhood bar: a hangout.

77 CHARLES ST., BOSTON | 617-523-9074

BRIGHTON

Brighton Beer Garden

As the name suggests, BBG is primarily a beer hall, jammed with the post-college crowd. It boasts more than 100 brews, 50 HDTVs and roadside attractions like trivia, karaoke, DJs, live music and an honest-to-God sleight-of-hand artist on Thursday nights (wear your cheap watch)—all with no cover and pub grub available five days a week at happy-hour prices.

BROOKLINE

Washington Square Tavern

T.W.S.T., as some call it, is a 12-year-old pub that's become a destination. Blessed with bookshelves, not TVs, the dark and woody interior is a cozy backdrop for upscale comfort food. Charcuterie, house-made sausage and crispy pork belly are current crowd-pleasers (and there are crowds, but no reservations). The tavern offers its own take on standards like the martini, Manhattan and Negroni, plus custom-made creations.

SUMMER SCENE

THE WHISKEY PRIEST

FRIED OYSTERS and anything Irish sizzle in the Seaport District, which welcomed this gastropub last spring. Like its namesake, the stereotypically besotted-yet-soulful cleric (think Friar Tuck), the Whiskey Priest is bawdy but entertaining. Dance to DJs, stomp to Irish music, lounge on the patio for Sunday brunch and, yes, take a crack at more than 100 varieties of whiskey.

CAMBRIDGE: INMAN SQUARE

Trina's Starlite Lounge

Hospitality is the star here. The simple, playful menu, featuring fried chicken and waffles and a Cuba de Tallahassee sandwich, is just what you want when unwinding. An inviting scene makes everyone feel like part of a happy if slightly dysfunctional family. It's the place where industry vets show up, both after their shifts and for Monday brunch, when Bloody Marys and Fernet flow freely.

CAMBRIDGE: KENDALL SQUARE

Lord Hobo

Kendall Square has always been a crossroads for Cambridge hipsters and the professional suits that work in the area. Lord Hobo caters to both with.$4 pints from Haverhill Brewery and craft cocktails like the Angelina (gin, St-Germain, yellow Chartreuse, fresh lemon, bitters). There are also nightly $5 appetizer specials, and $1 oysters from 5 to 7 pm, Monday through Thursday. It's a stellar way to start exploring a menu that expands into kobe steak tips, burrata pecan pesto crostini and pork belly with pickled napa slaw.

Toad

For 18 years, Toad has been a tiny nightlife beacon for a hip, artistic set and musicians on nights off. Cousin to the Lizard Lounge (among the five Cambridge boîtes owned by the Christopher family), it's touted local talent from G. Love and Jennifer Trynin to Morphine and Tracy Bonham. Guided by the hand of stellar booker Billy Beard, the bands are the biggest draw, with the microbrew selection providing extra incentive. Never a cover; almost always packed.

CHARLESTOWN

Ironside Grill

Ironside feels airy and new, but it's seen some life. At age 61, the establishment has been around since the days the Winter Hill Gang counted their ill-gotten gains on the bartop. Recent renovations added big windows, polished the woodwork to a glossy sheen and burnished the coffered ceiling. Monthly drink specials, friendly staff and an outdoor patio draw neighbors and a TD Garden faction willing to make the short walk across the Charlestown Bridge for some civilized fandom.

DORCHESTER

Sonny's Pub & Restaurant

An Irish-themed fixture in Adams Village since 1968, Sonny's is part sports bar, part family-fare restaurant (they even have an early-bird special). Among the karaoke, trivia and memorabilia standbys are prices that sadly aren't seen much anymore: Try $2.75 beers and pizzas on Tuesdays. From an Irish breakfast to standout steak tips, it's one-stop shopping for famished locals.

DOWNTOWN CROSSING

Silvertone Bar & Grill

For 14 years, Silvertone's greatest strength has been its staff, from owners to servers to bartenders ready with a warm greeting and a cold beer. The roast chicken and mac 'n' cheese are still delicious, and an accompanying bottle of wine can't be had at a better price. Consistency is key at this downtown gem that attracts a cast of regulars who add to the fun.

CAMBRIDGE: HARVARD SQUARE

Russell House Tavern

THIS YEAR-OLD SPOT, more elegant than most cramped Harvard hangouts, draws young and older professionals, academics and tourists. It's a spacious gastropub with an outdoor patio, a bistro-style upstairs eatery and a subterranean dining room that's dark, warm and decidedly sleek. The upmarket effort is evident in composed small plates, cask ales, and an array of Seelbachs, Scottish Plays and other glassfuls of amber liquids.

SOUTH END
THE GALLOWS

IN STARK CONTRAST to its name, the Gallows brings lightheartedness to a section of town that sometimes takes itself too seriously. Chef Seth Morrison shows a deft touch with steak and salmon, but also puckish creativity with a changing lineup of burgers and poutine. Displaying the same mischievous spirit, bartenders crack open bottles of Boone's Farm and cans of Natural Light while turning out wild cocktails like the Grave Robber, made with vodka, jasmine tea, Lillet and lavender. The establishment is named for its location on the Neck, where Boston's stocks stood in the 1700s. But the vibe couldn't be livelier.

JAMAICA PLAIN
James's Gate Restaurant & Pub

Named after the centuries-old St. James's Gate at the Guinness brewery in Dublin, JP's saintless James has warmed the hearts and bellies of devoted patrons with its handsome fireplace and satisfying food since 1997. Built of stone, stucco and slate to resemble the brewery, it features rotating displays by local artists. Keep comfortable with the varied wine and beer list (stouts and ales from $5), which offers intriguing selections throughout the year.

5 MCBRIDE ST., JAMAICA PLAIN | 617-983-2000 | JAMESSGATE.COM

NEWTON

Paddy's Pub

With its white walls, support beams and hanging plants, the Paddy's exterior has a traditional look. Inside, a leather-and-wood design backs up the claim, but bartenders make leaps from the expected with concoctions like pomegranate lemonade and Highlands Sangria. With plenty of personality, Paddy's is a great suburban alternative to more crowded and expensive metropolitan pubs.

95 ELM ST., WEST NEWTON | 617-965-6444 | PADDYS.US

NORTH END

Ducali Pizzeria & Bar

Here's a young-adult haven that's more Garden-oriented than traditional–North End, with corresponding crowds during pregame. There are craft brews on tap, sports on the TV, trivia on Mondays and celeb tags on the wall. (Tim Pawlenty stopped by?) Beer flights are a fun touch. So, too, are the specialty cocktails, priced nicely at $6 and up. Ducali scores points for food, drink, value and an atmosphere the neighborhood needs.

289 CAUSEWAY ST., BOSTON | 617-742-4144 | DUCALIPIZZA.COM

SOMERVILLE

Highland Kitchen

Each year, this gastropub continues to expand its fan base. Attractions are the bountiful bar (50 beers, well-priced wine) and craft cocktails (try the Mark 'n' Stormy, made with Maker's Mark and chili-infused ginger beer). The quirky, quality dishes with a Southern tinge (blackened catfish po'boys, spicy jambalaya), live music on Sundays and the presence of Joe McGuirk behind the sticks amplify the down-home feel.

150 HIGHLAND AVE., SOMERVILLE | 617-625-1131 | HIGHLANDKITCHEN.COM

SOUTH BOSTON

The Playwright Restaurant & Bar

A perennial favorite with Southie's yuppie denizens and natives alike, this is the definition of a reliable, somewhat polished neighborhood pub. The menu sports solid bar fare like quesadillas and steak tips, as well as more refined dishes like oven-roasted halibut. Weekend brunch pulls in the crowds, as do games on the big TVs and an enviable menu of draft beers.

WEST ROXBURY

West on Centre

Owner Michael Conlon Jr., a second-generation Boston bar owner, has a track record of reviving threadbare neighborhood spots (think the Paramount and the 21st Amendment in Beacon Hill or Dorchester's Blarney Stone). Now celebrating its seventh year, West on Centre combines a lustrous, affable look with an untucked personality—the type of place where a half-price pizza can be paired with a $75 cabernet. And Tuesdays present a rare city treat: a chance to play sommelier, as the bar lets you BYOB.

CHIHULY: THROUGH THE LOOKING GLASS

AT THE MUSEUM OF FINE ARTS

DALE CHIHULY'S career as a studio pioneer could have ended after a car accident left him blind in one eye, but this new perspective helped his art reach unprecedented heights. Chihuly directs a team of glass-blowers in the creation of his vibrant but soothing, strong but delicate sculpture. Through Aug. 7, the Museum of Fine Arts' Gund Gallery showcases 40 years of pieces from the RISD grad, including the 56-foot-long "Mille Fiori" (Italian for "A Thousand Flowers") and the "Lime Green Icicle Tower" installations—the latter created specifically for the new Shapiro Courtyard.

LOCAL BAND / DAVID WAX MUSEUM

THE BAND THAT employs a jarana (a Mexican instrument similar to a guitar) and a quijada (a percussion instrument made from a donkey's jawbone) could probably make any style feel fresh. But for Boston-based innovators David Wax and Suz Slezak, success is rooted in their reinterpretation of familiar rock and folk with an intriguing overlay of traditional Mexican influences. It's a sound that's been described as "Mexo-Americana." Wax and Slezak, graduates of Harvard and Wellesley, respectively, bolstered their appeal with the release of their second album, Everything Is Saved, and a win at the 2010 Boston Music Awards. ACTOR IN A LOCAL PRODUCTION

Gavin Creel in Prometheus Bound at the American Repertory Theater

It's a special kind of performer who can awe audiences while spending most of the show shackled to a rock. Thankfully, Tony nominee Gavin Creel was up for the challenge. As the title character in Steven Sater and Serj Tankian's Aeschylus-inspired musical Prometheus Bound, Creel wowed at the A.R.T. with a performance of core strength and shirtless rebellion.

ACTRESS IN A LOCAL PRODUCTION

Amanda Palmer in Cabaret at the American Repertory Theater

An alumna of Lexington High School and the local experimental rock scene, Amanda Palmer hit a high note with her 2010 turn as the Emcee in the Steven Bogart–directed production of Cabaret at the A.R.T. "There was much more of an improvisational playground for the Emcee," says Palmer, on why she chose to play the glowering, androgynous role. Her creative genius (and social media prowess—she has over 500,000 Twitter followers) has earned her a worldwide following as a street performer, Dresden Doll, solo artist and now as a risk-taking stage actress.

ALBUM BY A LOCAL ARTIST

Chamber Music Society by Esperanza Spalding

Floppy-haired Justin Bieber seemed like a shoo-in for the 2010 Grammy for Best New Artist, but one jazz ingenue had other plans. Berklee-trained 26-year-old Esperanza Spalding snagged the prize—one well deserved after her third album, Chamber Music Society, received international acclaim. Clever composition, sparkling vocals and velvety bass lines characterize the intimate set, the string section of which nods to her eclectic musical roots growing up in Portland, Ore., and her teenage years in youth orchestras and jazz clubs.

COMEDY CLUB

ImprovBoston

In a town crammed with bars that buzz with discourse about the current economic crisis, ImprovBoston is the place you go to laugh your ass off. The Central Square nonprofit troupe's gut-busting performances have kept audiences giggling for 29 years, with shows that range from the family-oriented to naked comedy. Affordable tickets attract fans, as do improv training classes where you can hone your own skills. Devotees don't miss their annual Boston Improv Festival, College Comedy Beanpot or the Women in Comedy Festival.

DJ Die Young

Born in Malden and raised in Amesbury—a town better known for its homegrown crops than its musicians—Jamie Michalski started DJ-ing school dances at 16 and, as a BU undergrad, worked his way through the Allston house-party circuit. Now he holds court as DJ Die Young, Thursday nights at the Middlesex Lounge, where he spins dance, house and Berlin techno with a skill that makes even the tightest-T-shirt-wearing Euro succumb to local pride. DRAG SHOW
Pussy on the House by the Gold Dust Orphans

This drag version of Tennessee Williams' Cat on a Hot Tin Roof is the brainchild of Ryan Landry's gender-bending Gold Dust Orphans troupe. They originally staged it in 2004, but the recent passing of Elizabeth Taylor—who starred as Maggie the Cat in 1958's film version—was reason for a revival. Directed by Landry and starring a glittery cast that included Penny Champayne, Olive Another and Landry himself, the show proved an instant smash.

THEATER COMPANY
THE ACTORS' SHAKESPEARE PROJECT

BRINGING 400-YEAR-OLD TEXTS to life isn't a simple goal in the days of smart phone apps and HDTV. Yet Somerville's Actors' Shakespeare Project, led by founding artistic director Benjamin Evett, always succeeds. Forgoing flashy production tricks to focus on language and craft, Evett and his company invigorate the old stories and tackle original works from local playwrights, like this season's The Hotel Nepenthe, by John Kuntz, and Living in Exile, by Jon Lipsky. And they're not confined by the traditional theater space, staging works in unique places like art galleries and museums.

GALLERY
Samsøn

Always looking forward, the South End's Samsøn gallery takes a comprehensive approach to the artistic experience. Take, for instance, their devotion to fresh, interdisciplinary works created through an artist-in-residency program. This spring, they hosted Hank Willis Thomas' Scouring the Earth for My Affinity, a recontextualization of advertising images from the 1960s that speak volumes about race and conflict in America. Owner and curator Camilo Alvarez says the gallery's mission this year is to widen its scope with fresh perspectives.

HOTTEST TICKET
Adele at the House of Blues

British songstress Adele shook up the airwaves when she released her 2008 debut album, 19 (featuring the hit single "Chasing Pavements"), to critical acclaim. A brief hiatus left many wanting more. With her new album, 21, and an international chart-topping single, "Rolling in the Deep," she was poised to bring down the House of Blues on May 15. Tickets disappeared almost instantly, and the show brought in more than 2,000 fans for a simple, soulful set performed with a five-piece band.

MOVIE FILMED IN BOSTON
The Social Network

Writer Aaron Sorkin and director David Fincher's pitch-perfect adaptation of Ben Mezrich's The Accidental Billionaires wisely chose to shoot on location in Boston for its take on Facebook's beginnings. The city and its landmarks—including Somerville's Thirsty Scholar Pub, which provides the backdrop for the electric opening scene—serve as uncredited supporting actors, punctuating the film's themes of competition, success and power. Although no scenes were filmed at Harvard, places like Phillips Andover, Milton Academy and Wheelock College stepped in to provide appropriate notes of ivy and brick.

NONFICTION BOOK BY A LOCAL AUTHOR
Not at All What One Is Used To: The Life and Times of Isabella Gardner by Marian Janssen

In Boston, the name "Isabella Gardner" conjures up notions of art, grace and philanthropy. Marian Janssen isn't writing about that Isabella Gardner. Instead, she tackles the Boston socialite's great-grandniece, "Belle" Gardner, a black sheep who lived a life of reckless moments, dabbled in poetry (she wrote four well-received volumes) and husbands (also four), and mingled with some of the greatest literary minds of her time. Janssen's biography reveals a new generation of Gardner family drama, intrigue, and the price of wealth and status.

LOCAL AUTHOR Dennis Lehane

He said he'd never again write about the characters that made him a household name, but they came knocking on his literary door. Dorchester native and New York Times best-selling novelist Dennis Lehane revisits the fictional Boston investigators Patrick Kenzie and Angela Gennaro for the sixth time in 2011's Moonlight Mile. His Dorchester duo rose to literary stardom in 1998's explosive kidnapping thriller Gone, Baby, Gone (and in 2007's film adaptation directed by Ben Affleck). The new novel is a second act to that story, with a married Kenzie and Gennaro pursuing the now-grown-up Amanda McCready after she disappears once again. We can hardly wait for the Hollywood treatment.

NOVEL BY A LOCAL AUTHOR
The Map of True Places by Brunonia Barry

Massachusetts scribe Brunonia Barry is back after her much celebrated debut, The Lace Reader, hit the New York Times best-seller list in 2009. Her sophomore novel, The Map of True Places, tells the emotional tale of Zee Finch, a Boston psychotherapist who returns to her native Salem after a patient's suicide, only to find that her father's Parkinson's has worsened. Weaving ideas about transcendentalism, psychiatry and the novels of Melville and Hawthorne, Barry creates a moving story that doesn't shirk from difficult themes like suicide and the burden of taking care of a loved one who's terminally ill.

"So many radio stations today are just jukeboxes programmed by corporate offices hundreds of miles away," says Program Director Katie DiMartile. "At WERS we have retained our souls."

RECORD LABEL
Rounder Records

This independent, Burlington-based label has a cool, relaxed vibe that attracts bold-faced names looking to produce quality, thoughtful albums. They've pulled legends like John Mellencamp, Steve Martin, Gregg Allman and Robert Plant into their fold, and the weight of their roster means Rounder can compete in the same league as the corporate big dogs. A recent triumph: Alison Krauss & Union Station's Paper Airplane, which debuted at No. 3 on the Billboard Top 200 Album Chart and No. 1 on the Country, Folk and Bluegrass Album Charts.

REPERTORY PRODUCTION

Sons of the Prophet at the Huntington Theatre Company

The plot—two gay brothers coming to grips with their father's death after a high-school prank gone awry—isn't as grim as it seems. Playwright Stephen Karam delivered a clever and laugh-out-loud look at protagonists who, through their grief, must reckon with the cast of characters in their lives while navigating a return to small-town America. (Karam, a Scranton, Penn., native now living in New York City, knows his subject.) A terrific performance by Tony winner Joanna Gleason and leadership by Huntington Theatre Company artistic director Peter DuBois made this world-premiere comedy a hit.

Citi Performing Arts Center Wang Theatre

Here, even the nosebleed seats offer an upscale perspective. Built during the roaring good times of 1925, the theater is still an opulent backdrop for national tours and evenings on the town. It had its rough years, and in the 1980s it was badly in need of a face-lift. But after lots of fund-raising and a hefty donation from Dr. An Wang, theatergoers once again ambled around the gilded, marble Grand Lobby. Stepping inside is like being transported to the glory days of live performance, but there are new traditions at play, too: Every holiday season, the Wang hosts the Radio City Christmas Spectacular. And, of course, Bostonians look to the marquee for names like Janet Jackson, Eddie Vedder and Tony Bennett.

JEILA FARZANEH

THE PASSIVITY AND DETACHMENT spawned by social media mean we've been hearing a lot of complaining about the demise of human connection. That's where 30-year-old Jeila Farzaneh finds her inspiration. A Miami native and 2009 graduate of the School of the Museum of Fine Arts, Farzaneh searches sites like Facebook and eBay for figures with whom to forge a relation through painting—but she never meets her models. "Painting these images brings it back to real time," she says from her Jamaica Plain studio. Oil paints and quick, lively brushstrokes characterize Farzaneh's life-sized creations, which were most recently on display at James's Gate in Jamaica Plain.

CUP
THE STANLEY CUP

WE'LL ADMIT IT: When the Bruins lost the first two games against the Canucks, our traditional New England defeatism began to creep in. Ah, well, they had a good run. And even when they forced Game 7, the odds seemed long indeed, for no Bruins team had won a Game 7 on the road in 87 years. But, lo and behold, the B's showed the mettle that has defined our pro franchises this century, bringing the Stanley Cup home to Boston and leaving mild-mannered Vancouver fans to loot Tim Hortons restaurants and drown their sorrows in Molson. The remorseless buzz saw of Boston dominance is now causing international incidents. Pass the Cup.

AGITATOR
Brad Marchand

Trying to talk his way onto the team prior to the season, Brad Marchand assured general manager Peter Chiarelli that he'd score 20 goals if given a chance. The rookie bettered his prediction by a goal, then proceeded to add 11 more in the postseason (a rookie total that's not only a record for the Bruins, but one tied for second place in league history). Sure, Marchand's a little rough around the edges, but that's part of his appeal. "I need to stop doing dumb things," he admitted early in the playoffs. But considering his talent—the shorthanded goal in Game 3 against Vancouver was a thing of beauty—we'd say the good far outweighs the bad. Marchand is sort of like the Pedroia of the Bruins—small, cocky, and able to back up his incessant trash talk with serious skills.

AMAZING FEAT
Wes Welker's press conference

We knew Jets coach Rex Ryan was an insufferable, boorish, Cheetos-stained mountain of jowls, but we didn't know he was a foot man—that is, until an unfortunate Internet video revealed a private side of his love life (one that should've remained private). Wes Welker, recognizing the vast comedic opportunities of the situation, used a pregame press conference to insert a foot reference into just about everything he uttered. "You have to put your best foot forward"; "You have to be on your toes"; and you should definitely be a "good little foot soldier," deadpanned Welker. The Hooded One was not amused, benching Welker for the first series of the game. Which is too bad, because on that drive Brady threw a pass that was off by a foot, resulting in a turnover that ultimately led to defeat.

BACKUP
Shaq

Perhaps we should rename this category "Shaqup." Never has a free agent at the tail end of his career so thoroughly embraced the city. Shaq's stunts, like posing as a statue in Harvard Square, were emblematic of his role with the Celtics: In his final NBA season, the goofy giant was officially the C's backup center and unofficially the team mascot.

Despite his off-court comic antics, Shaq was still a threat on the floor, as the Charlotte Bobcats learned on Jan. 14. That night, Shaq stepped up with 23 points and five blocks to help the Celts eke out a five-point victory. And maybe Boston's affinity for the Big Shamrock also had a little to do with common ground: Finally, we found someone who dislikes Kobe as much as we do.

CLUTCH PLAY
Nathan Horton's overtime goal to win Game 7 against the Canadiens

The Montreal Canadiens are the Bruins' biggest rivals. The Bruins hadn't won a Game 7 in 17 years. It was overtime. And Horton's goal not only moved the Bruins into the next round, it also gave them momentum—they swept the Flyers in the next series and went on to

BILL MUELLER PLEASANT SURPRISE AWARD
DANNY WOODHEAD

DID ANYONE EXPECT a 5'8" undrafted free agent out of Chadron State to become one of the Patriots' top playmakers? Well, one guy did: a certain diabolical Pats coach who's admittedly picked some duds in recent years. But Danny Woodhead's breakout success is a classic example of Bill Belichick's eye for underrated talent. In his first active game as a Patriot (Sept. 26 against the Bills), Woodhead broke free for a 22-yard touchdown run, and he never looked back. By the end of the season, Woodhead's 5.68 yards per carry had set a new team record. The back's versatility is reminiscent of Kevin Faulk: His first 100-yard game came from receptions, not rushing, and his 547 yards on the ground were augmented by 379 yards in the air. And is Woodhead's success all the sweeter because he was waived by the Jets? Yes. Yes, it is.

MIKE LOWELL

WHEN THE SOX picked up Mike Lowell from the Marlins in 2005, few local fans thought he'd become a Red Sox institution. Saddled with a big contract and coming off a bad year, Lowell was more like "that guy we had to take to get Beckett." But by the time Lowell retired at the end of last season—after missing a home run by about five feet in his last at-bat—the goateed infielder was such an integral part of the Red Sox organization that the team gave him third base off the field, a Fenway seat with his number on it and $100,000 for his charity. Lowell proved a gutsy addition to the team, and his World Series ring (and MVP award) attest to his place in Red Sox history.

face the Lightning in the Eastern Conference finals. There, they ended up playing another Game 7, which they won 1-0 on a third-period goal by... Nathan Horton. If there were a Dr. Seuss book about the Bruins forward, it would be called Horton Hears a Goooooaaaallll! And if there were one about Vancouver's Aaron Rome, it would be called Oh, The Places You'll Go! (Namely, Hell).

COMEBACK
The Red Sox offense

Pedroia. Youkilis. Ellsbury. Last season, the meat of the Red Sox' batting order was about as healthy as a Curt Schilling cadaver-leg. Now the big hitters are back, and the team is starting to look like the scary win machine it was supposed to be all along. Does anyone even remember all that losing and pessimism at the beginning of the season? By mid-May, the team record climbed above .500. As of early June, the Sox had the highest team batting average in the American League—.270—and the most doubles, an indication of newfound speed on the base paths. Between them, Carl Crawford and Jed Lowrie had more triples than the entire Orioles team. David Ortiz and Adrian Gonzalez are fearsome monsters. The Red Sox may have started slow in 2011, but if the injury bug stays at bay, this looks like a lineup built to power the squad deep into the fall.

CRAFTY VETERAN
Ray Allen

Allen is 34 years old, which is fairly wizened in NBA terms. But at the end of the game, is there anyone scarier when the ball gets kicked out past the 3-point line? On Feb. 10, against the Lakers, Allen broke Reggie Miller's all-time record for three-pointers—coincidentally, with Miller announcing the game. Allen's sweet stroke has signaled the death knell for many a Celtics opponent, and his form is so impeccable that ESPN even broke out the Sports Science team to analyze his shot and quantify what makes him so unstoppable. One fact they found is that from the left corner Allen's accuracy is a whopping 41 percent higher than the league average. Which makes us glad that Allen picked up his option for next year. Because going into the 2011–12 season, Jesus Shuttlesworth (still) got game.

FRUSTRATION
Patriots 21, Jets 28

Last December, the Patriots smeared the Jets 45-3. In January, Rex got his revenge, with the Jets beating the Pats and subsequently acting like they'd won the Super Bowl. Of course, the trash-talking Jets then lost to the Steelers in the AFC championship game, but a consoling dose of schadenfreude can't fully compensate for the sense of missed opportunity. Had the Pats not blown that divisional game against New York, there's an excellent chance that Brady & Co. would've had front-row seats to witness Christina Aguilera butcher the national anthem.

MIDDLE FINGER TO HEARTBREAK HILL
Geoffrey Mutai

Mutai ran the 2011 Boston Marathon in 2 hours, 3 minutes, 2 seconds. Which isn't just a Boston record, but a record for any marathon, ever—and by nearly a full minute. But Mutai's blazing scamper from Hopkinton to Copley Square gets no love from the official record-keepers, because the International Association of Athletics Federations doesn't certify the Boston Marathon course. For one thing, the route goes downhill by about 470 feet over its 26.2 miles. And this year, there was

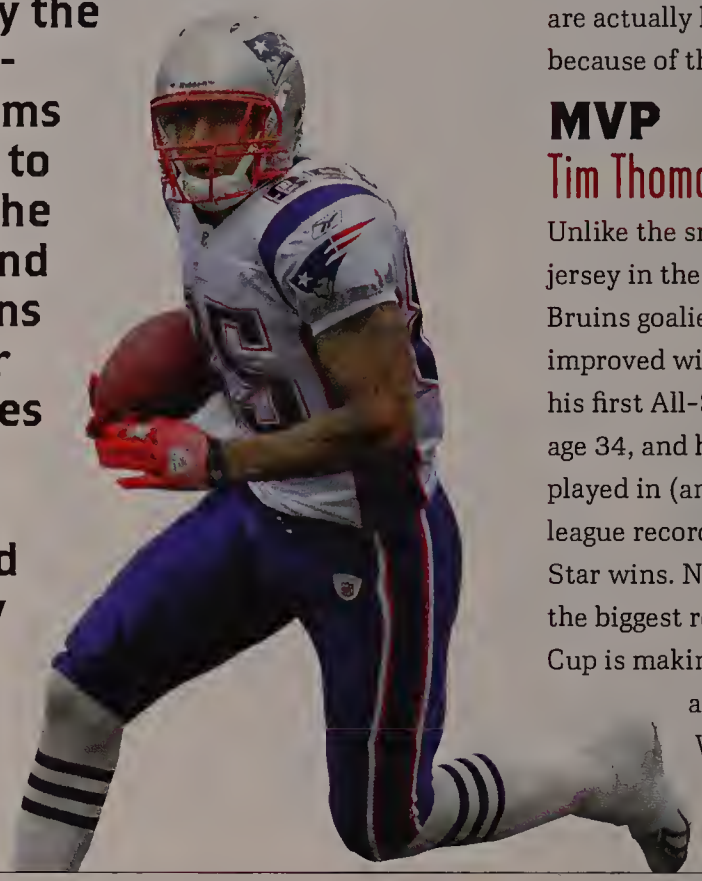
FEMALE ATHLETE

Sam Faber, Canadian Women's Hockey League



FORMER University of New Hampshire standout Sam Faber is accustomed to hockey superlatives—she was Rookie of the Year her freshman year at UNH and won a gold medal in China as part of the 2008 US national team. Now Faber's playing for Boston in the Canadian Women's Hockey League, and last year she led the squad with 15 goals and 15 assists over the 23-game season. The CWHL teams (Boston, Brampton, Burlington, Montreal and Toronto) are made up of Olympians and college stars, and even in that crowd Faber is an elite player. Her next challenge is to come up with a snappier name for her team, as "Boston Hockey Club" probably won't sell too many official jerseys in the merchandise shop.

SECRET WEAPON
GRONKNANDEZ

ROB GRONKOWSKI'S 10 touchdown receptions put him behind only one rookie tight end in NFL history—a guy by the name of Ditka. Obviously, opposing teams didn't expect Brady to keep targeting the 6'6" rookie in the end zone. So Brady kept doing it. And doing it. But Gronkowski's receptions and total yards weren't even tops for the team's tight ends; those high scores went to fellow rookie Aaron Hernandez, who tallied 563 yards to Gronk's 546. Put them together, and you've got an 1,100 yard receiver with 16 touchdowns. Basically, New England's low-profile big men put up numbers to equal any elite wide receiver—but without the megalomania, controversy and sullen postgame press conferences.

a tailwind. Thus, according to the IAAF, the Boston course is too easy and the record doesn't count. Which totally makes sense. All those people staggering up Heartbreak Hill who look like they're about to vomit their internal organs are actually having a great time—because of the tailwind, you see.

MVP
Tim Thomas

Unlike the smelly Joe Thornton jersey in the back of your closet, Bruins goalie Tim Thomas has improved with age. Thomas made his first All-Star team in 2008, at age 34, and he's subsequently played in (and won) two more—a league record for consecutive All-Star wins. Now, at 37, Thomas is the biggest reason that the Stanley Cup is making the rounds at Tia's and Foxwoods instead of Whistler and Vancouver-area fish markets. In the 2011 playoffs, Thomas led the league in nearly every goaltending stat. He made his Canucks counterpart, Roberto Luongo, look like a skittish peewee. Over the seven-game Stanley Cup finals, Thomas allowed only eight goals, and his 37-save shutout in Game 7 sealed the Bruins' title. In addition to Lord Stanley's Cup, Thomas took home the Conn Smythe Trophy for playoff MVP. It's amazing, considering all this, that Thomas also found the time to kill Bin Laden. OK, that's hyperbole. Or is it?

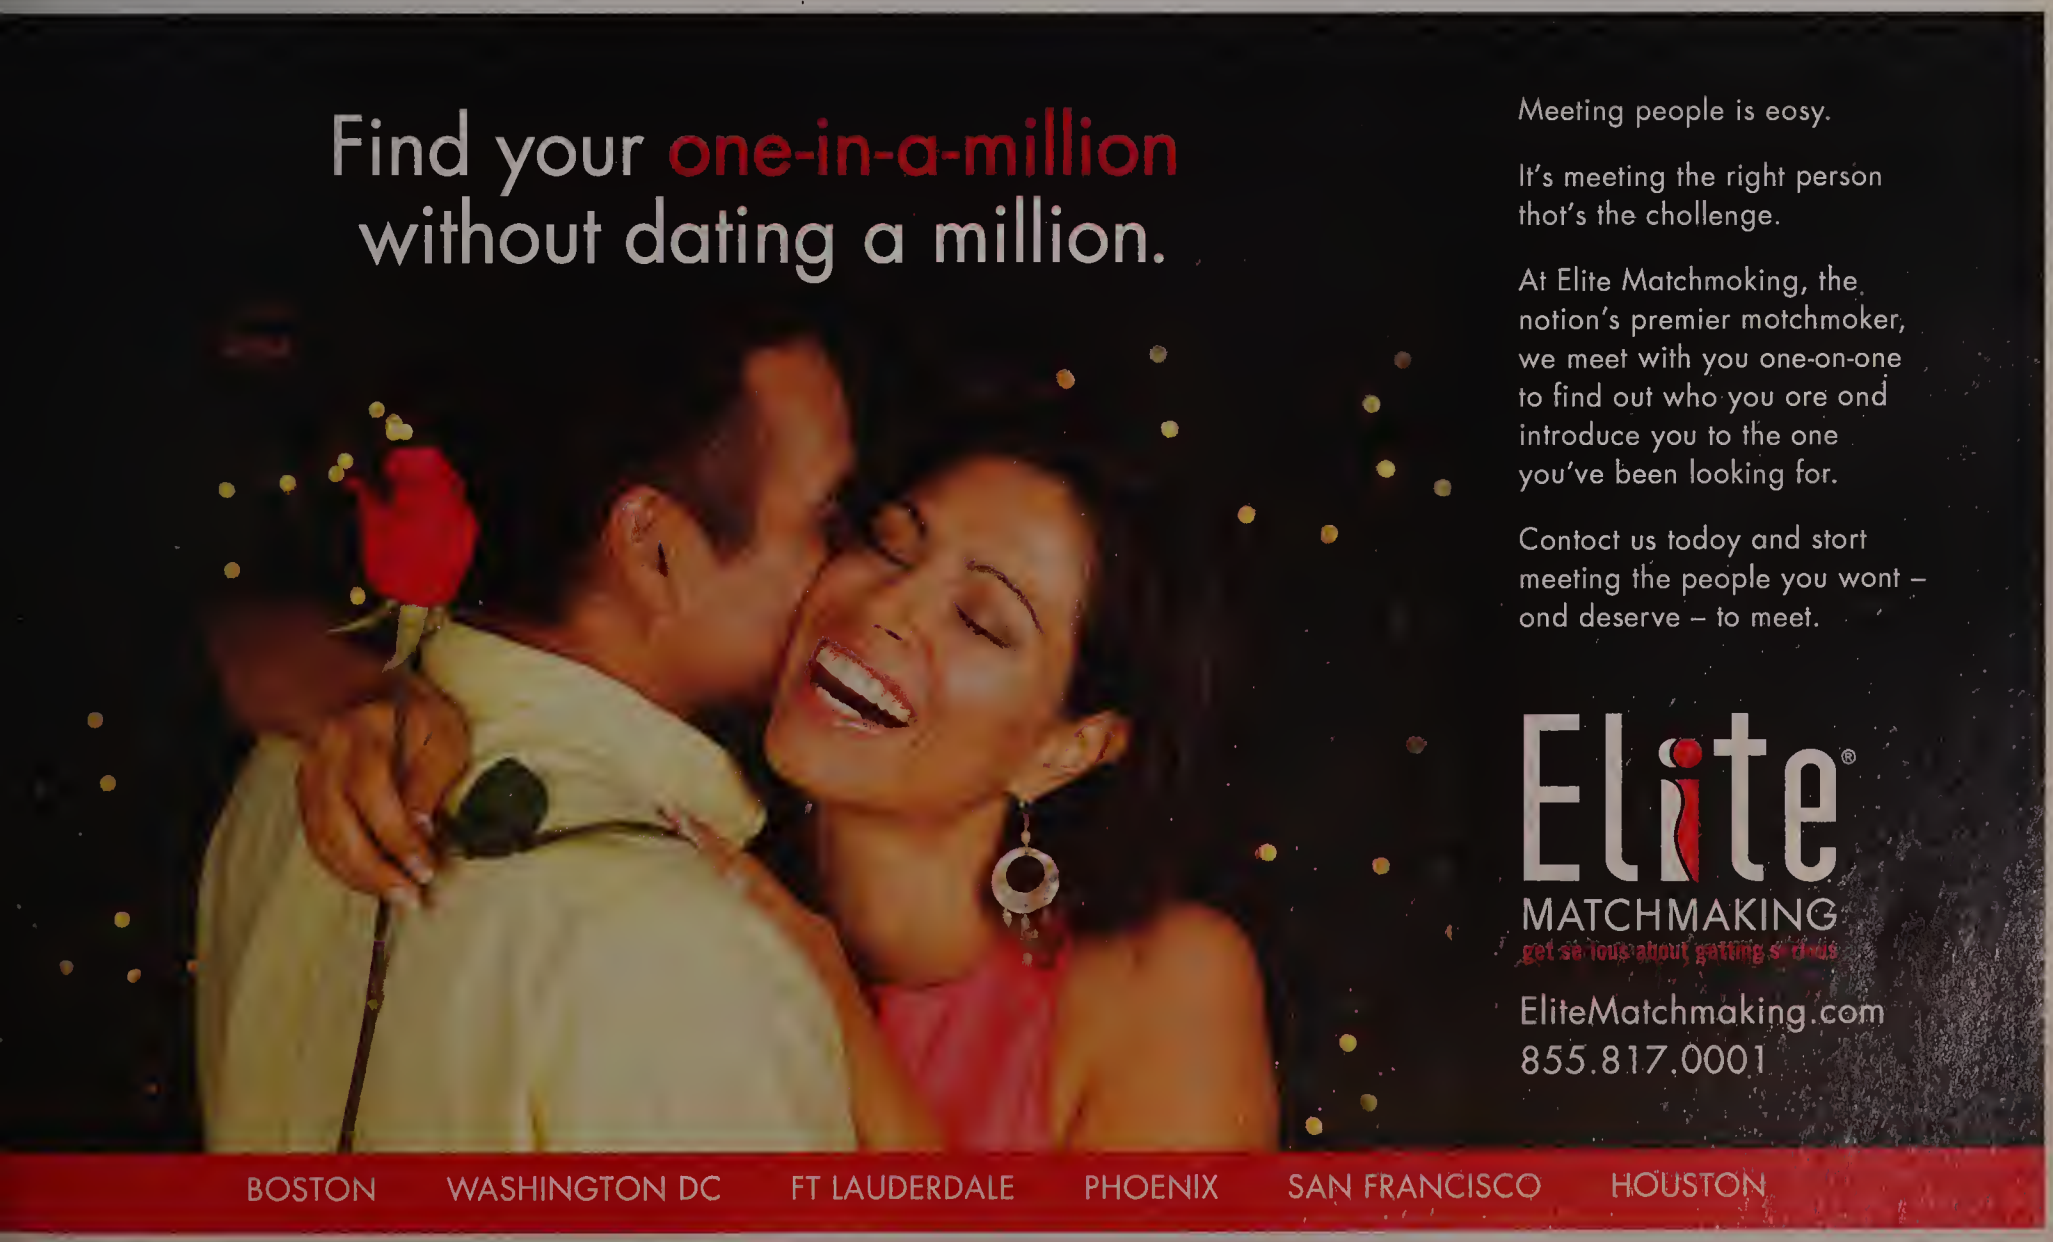
ROOKIE
Devin McCourty



You ever wish you had a do-over? Bill Belichick, if he ever second-guesses anything, might've had a few misty-eyed reminiscences about Asante Samuel. It turns out that even in a team-oriented system, certain individuals are actually really hard to replace. Enter Devin McCourty. The Patriots cornerback justified his first-round draft selection and then some. McCourty was the first Pats rookie since Curtis Martin to make the Pro Bowl—and when Martin was a rookie, Oldsmobile was in business but Google wasn't. McCourty was a terror for opposing quarterbacks, finishing the year with seven interceptions. That number, incidentally, put him in a three-way tie for second in the league. One player in the seven-INT club was Troy Polamalu. The other? Asante Samuel. And that's how you execute a do-over, Belichick-style.

TRADE
Three prospects and a player to be named later for Adrian Gonzalez

San Diego Padres GM Jed Hoyer came from the Red Sox organization and probably knew who he was getting in prospects Casey Kelly, Anthony Rizzo and Reymond Fuentes. But prospects represent unrealized potential, whereas Adrian Gonzalez represents a .340 batting average and a pace currently set for about 120 RBIs and 30 home runs. Baseball wonks always thought that Gonzalez would fare well in a park like Fenway, and the wonks were correct. It's certainly possible that Rizzo, Kelly or Fuentes will come back to haunt us à la Jeff Bagwell, but right now it looks like Theo got back more than he gave.

WORST USE OF A MERCURY VILLAGER
The guy who got in the accident with Tom Brady

Last September, the city's collective heart stopped when we learned that Tom Brady had been in a car accident. Thankfully, everything turned out OK. While some local had the audacity to touch Tom's Audi with a Mercury Villager, the aftermath revealed why Brady is a champion. After prying the cars apart with his bare hands and healing the other driver with his smile, Brady graciously pulled out a Sharpie and signed the dented minivan, thus quintupling its value. Then Brady invented the cure for cancer, wrote it on a football and threw it across the city to Dana-Farber. Then he picked up all the litter around the accident scene and put it in a recycle bin. Then he got back in his car and drove to practice, where he inspired everyone with his positive attitude and confident leadership, just like any other day.

ARTIST

THE FLINT GROUP'S ACCIDENTAL PAINTER

ON MARCH 9, an overturned tractor-trailer snarled up the junction of I-95 and Route 128. The resultant mess was fit for Jackson Pollock, since the truck had been carrying eight tons of ink in various hues, making the road erupt in vibrant blooms of red, yellow and blue. As an accident, it caused traffic misery. But as art—we call it "Goliath Shakes the Toner Cartridge"—it looked outstanding.

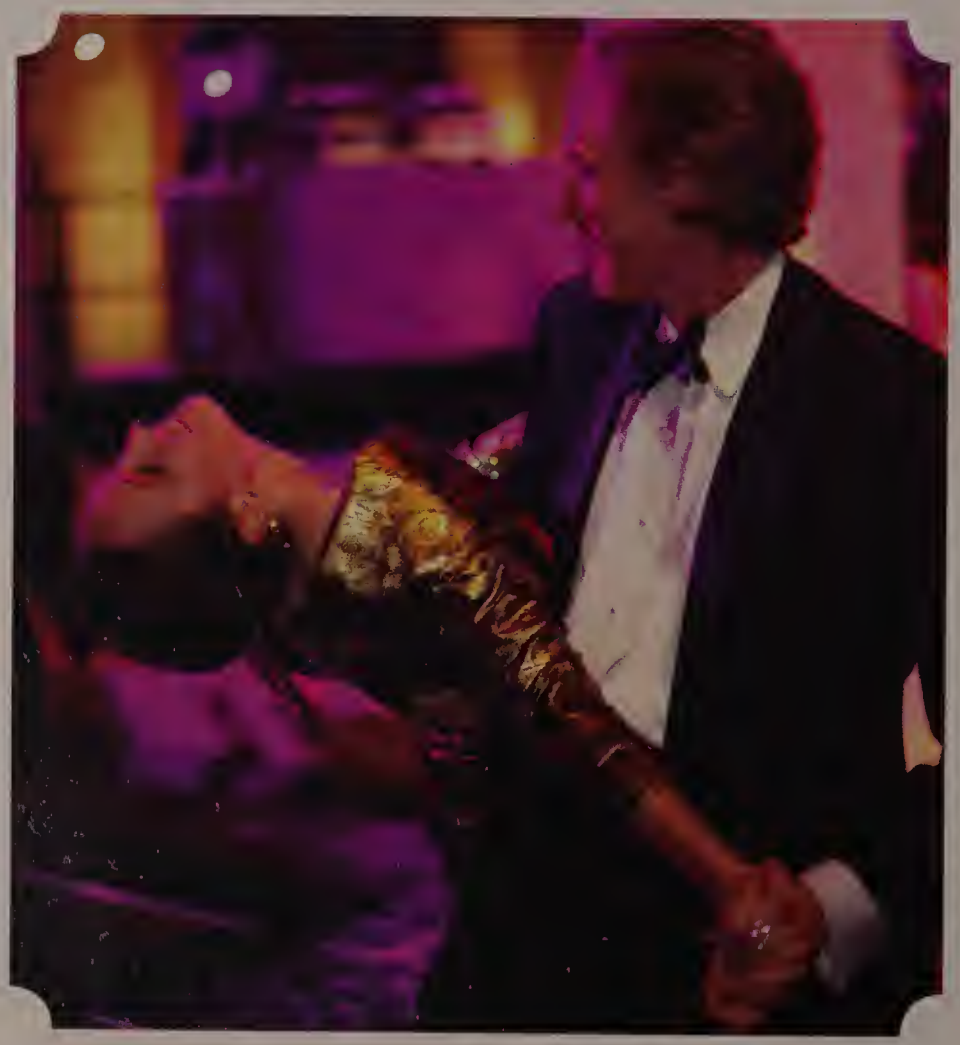
DO-GOODER

Ted Cutler

A hometown boy—Emerson College, class of '51—Cutler has deployed his philanthropic muscle to benefit the Crohn's and Colitis Foundation, the American Liver Foundation and the Greater Boston Food Bank, among many other good causes. He's a loyal supporter of the arts, from the Boston Ballet to his alma mater's programs (he and his late wife, Joan, gave $2 million to help restore the Majestic Theatre). But Cutler deserves a shout-out for a more whimsical line item on his charitable-giving budget: helping to light the Comm. Ave. mall over the winter. The lights are a relatively recent fixture—they first went up in 1998—but already seem like a venerated tradition. Originally a temporary touch, Cutler helped make them permanent, giving the city a splash of cheery pizzazz and visual warmth during the winter freeze.

EVIDENCE THAT THE COLD WAR ISN'T OVER



Russian spies in Cambridge

Last summer, we learned that seemingly patriotic citizens Donald Howard Heathfield and Tracey Lee Ann Foley were actually part of a Russian spy ring. The duo of undercover operatives was based in Cambridge, where they must've shared a knowing wink every time they boarded the Red Line. Heathfield and Foley were two of 10 spies uncovered nationwide, but of course, New York got the sexiest one: Anna Chapman. (Said Joe Biden after her deportation, "Let me be clear. It wasn't my idea to send her back.") So what were Russian agents doing in Cambridge? We can only assume that they were trying to unlock the secret recipe for the Hong Kong's scorpion bowls.

PARTY YOU WEREN'T INVITED TO

THE OPENING GALA FOR THE MFA'S NEW WING

THE MUSEUM OF FINE ARTS doesn't build another wing too often—especially not one that costs a half-billion dollars—and the November party to celebrate the new home to the Art of the Americas collection reflected the significance of the occasion. Despite chilly temperatures outside, the soaring, glass-walled courtyard lent an al fresco feel and kept guests cozy as they sipped cocktails and enjoyed a menu by Ken Oringer. Party planner Bryan Rafanelli encouraged the seasonal trompe l'oeil with 10-foot planters that provided a dash of airy green, while the building's exterior was bathed in pink light. If you got the chance to occupy the on-site photo booth, your mug was projected onto the courtyard's 63-foot-high walls. But that would've required being there, which you probably weren't.

NEIGHBORHOOD THAT'S ALWAYS THREE YEARS AWAY FROM GREATNESS

Downtown Crossing

We used to say this about the Seaport: "There's no reason that place shouldn't be great, and it ought to be a lot different in a few years." The waterfront finally got there, and now Downtown Crossing is the perplexingly forlorn part of town that seems like it ought to be hot… yet never manages to gather any momentum. Blame the stalled Filene's Basement project, blame the third-world confluence of cars and pedestrians on Washington Street, blame the cursed Native American burial ground that the place is built upon (according to legend that we just invented). But take our word for it: Three years from now, this place is going to be huge. Unless it isn't.

NOTABLE PASSING

William Taylor II

The challenge for a publisher—to merge profit with editorial excellence—has seldom been met as ably as it was by Taylor during his 19-year tenure at The Boston Globe. Taylor, who died May 1, built the newspaper into a financial behemoth that also won nine Pulitzer Prizes. When Taylor sold the Globe to The New York Times in 1993, for $1.1 billion, some critics viewed the deal as a rich guy cashing out. But the fact is, Taylor had to sell the Globe (or risk an imminent public takeover), and in retrospect, there are worse options than a takeover by another family-owned paper. Look at the depressing things that have happened to bought-out publications around the country—the Sam Zell bankruptcy disaster with the Tribune Company springs to mind—and Taylor's sale to the

REPTILIAN USE OF MASS TRANSIT

PENELOPE THE SNAKE

IT WAS JUST ANOTHER DAY at the MBTA lost and found, except that missing item was a boa constrictor. And the serpent wasn't actually found until a month after it went missing, when it turned up on an out-of-service train. How Penelope survived for a month is a mystery, but we can hypothesize that she subsisted on dried gum and made a nest out of discarded scratch tickets. The MBTA sent Penelope's owner a $650 bill for cleaning the train, along with an admonition that maybe in the future she could refrain from using a boa constrictor as a scarf while riding the Red Line. To everyone else, we say be careful on the T. It's a jungle down there.

WEIRDEST BUSINESS DECISION
CMGI's purchase of naming rights to Patriots stadium

Ten years ago, the Waltham-based venture capital and tech company was on the brink of shelling out millions for naming rights to the new stadium. By 2002, their stock had fallen below $1. They've since renamed themselves ModusLink Global Solutions, while the stadium name went to a company best known for manufacturing good old-fashioned razor blades.

Times starts looking pretty good in comparison. The past decade hasn't been kind to the Globe, but at least we still have a Globe. It's entirely possible that by selling his paper, William Taylor may have saved it.

SEAL TEAM SIX OF COUCH POTATOES
Daytime TV viewers who turned in Whitey

This category could also be called the "Why Didn't We Think of This Ages Ago?" Award. After 16 years on the lam, it seemed like Whitey Bulger was gone for good. Hell, he even outlasted Bin Laden. But Southie's most notorious gangster was foiled not by an armed dragnet, but by a TV commercial. The FBI began running a "Have you seen this woman?" ad aimed at finding Bulger's girlfriend. Within a week, they'd caught him. Let this be a lesson to evildoers everywhere: If SEAL Team Six doesn't get you, Regis and Kelly viewers will.

SHOWDOWN
Deval Patrick v. Fidelity

In March, Fidelity announced that it was moving 1,100 jobs out of state. Governor Deval Patrick cried foul, demanding a face-to-face conference with Fidelity honchos. He got his meeting, and the finance giant still moved. Within a week, Patrick announced he'd signed a deal to publish a memoir—a deal that carried a $1.35 million advance. The lesson in all of this: Patrick should've had his literary agent negotiate with Fidelity.

SURVIVOR
Boston Rob

Robert Mariano, Boston's professional Survivor contestant, finally won redemption—and a $1 million payday—on his fourth season on the show. Mariano's wife, Amber Brkich, won Survivor in 2004, taking home $1 million. With both spouses having reached the summit of reality-TV achievement, we imagine they're now homebodies who devise Machiavellian plots to determine who takes out the garbage or puts away the dishes. We wish Boston Rob a hearty congratulations but offer a warning, as well: Whatever you do, don't ask Richard Hatch for tax advice.

WORST PLACE TO MAKE OUT
At Fenway, on the new JumboTron

The ballpark's new big-screen is not the place you want to be immortalized in an HD lip-lock. The new trio of screens is 38 feet high and 100 feet wide. In standard TV terms, that's about 1,284 inches measured diagonally, which is more than enough to magnify your slobbery affections to truly revolting proportions. It's like the Lilliputians examining Gulliver's filthy pores. So next time the Kiss Cam comes around, make like a Puritan and keep your eyes on the field.

PROOF THERE'S NO BUSINESS LIKE SNOW BUSINESS

The $4,800 Shovel Job

LAST WINTER'S relentless storms brought out the best in Bostonians. Also, the worst. How much would you pay for someone to clear the snow off your roof? Is $4,800 too much? Amesbury police thought so when they busted a family of shovel-wielding opportunists for charging an elderly couple nearly five grand to do the job. The name of the culprits? Poetically enough, the Snows.

BOSTON CENTER FOR ADULT EDUCATION

THIS ISN'T YOUR typical adult ed program, and it wasn't just the "Bubbly French Brunch" or "Stone Carving" courses that tipped us off. Since 1933, the Boston Center for Adult Education has been where open minds gather to learn basic skills and arcana alike. Founder Dorothy Hewitt imagined a place where a return to the classroom could be fun and free of apprehension. Sometime during our belly dance workshop, we realized that her vision had come true.

BIKE SHOP

Bikes Not Bombs

Not many bicycle shops have a cogent philosophical code, but the principled staff at this Jamaica Plain institution believes that the more peaceful, benevolent life is the one lived on two wheels. In addition to providing Bostonians with a healthier, greener alternative for getting around the city, they do plenty of good in the community by hosting fund-raising bike drives and collecting donated bikes to give to underprivileged youth. Improving our bodies while bettering our society? That's a philosophy we can abide.

Tables of Content

Playing host to a dinner party of 50 relatives (or business associates or toddlers) can be intimidating enough, even without the ungodly nightmare of trying to cook and serve for a crowd. That's when we call Tables of Content. With dishes like wood-grilled Niman Ranch lamb loins and a salad of French country duck confit, impressing your guests is the easiest item on your to-do list. The best part? They're green-certified, so the desired impact on the plate will have little on the Earth.

INTIMATE APPAREL
FORTY WINKS

LEAVE IT TO frilly garters, nude underpinnings and a lavender-and-mango lace bra to spice up your days (and nights) at Forty Winks. The petite boutique stocks pretty little numbers by Cosabella, Toute la Nuit, Between the Sheets and Mimi Holliday. Those seeking backless, strapless or seamless support will find themselves in good hands. The Forty Winks staff, experts in all things lacy, can offer solutions from NuBra or Commando, helping you be sensibly sexy.

FINE JEWELRY
Lux Bond & Green

Any designer worth a sterling silver spoon (much less a diamond) is here. The fine-jewelry mecca triumphs at mixing old-school settings with of-the-minute style, mainly through a thoughtful selection of artists: Temple St. Clair, Ippolita and Carelle, not to mention the option to make your own wedding rings. With timepieces by Patek Phillippe, Baume & Mercier and TAG Heuer, this Back Bay shop features quality and service reliable as clockwork.

HANDBAGS
Flat of the Hill

The pocketbook connoisseur seeks the creative and the unusual over wallet-killing name brands. That's why people stampede to Flat of the Hill. Here, you'll find Lauren Merkin snakeskin clutches and MZ Wallace magenta totes, with enough variety to please both prepsters and punk rockers. Leather hobos, patterned Toss totes and Envirosax reusable shopping bags can become wardrobe staples, while delicate, jewelry-inspired numbers with long snake chains bring on the glitz. This shop is a handbag carryall for every occasion.

JEANS
The Tannery

The Tannery, now with locations on both sides of the Charles, turns denim into a spiritual matter. With full men's and women's collections from Seven for All Mankind, J Brand, Citizens of Humanity, Joe's Jeans, AG, Diesel, Hudson, Made and Crafted, their list of designer duds goes on and on. Curve-hugging skinny cuts by MiH and Rag & Bone will treat your body (and bum!) like a temple, while options from True Religion will make your legs go on for eternity. Amen.

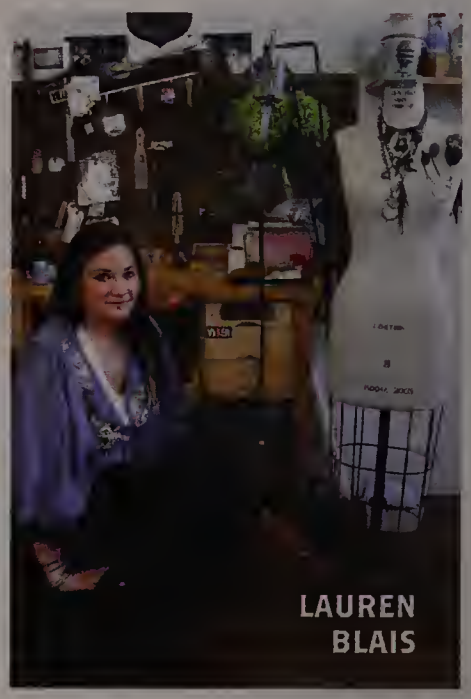
LOCAL DESIGNER, CLOTHING
Nara Paz



Nara Paz is our own Vera Wang. Our personal Marchesa. The Brazilian native graduated from Newton's Lasell College in 2009 and has been on fire ever since. Purchase her sophisticated designs—now carried at boutiques worldwide—at her Woburn atelier or Newbury Street's Matsu. The line's delectable ruffled strapless frocks, gold sequin–saturated sheaths and Jackie O–style pastel bouclé suits can handle any Hollywood premiere. Bring on the paparazzi.

LOCAL DESIGNER, JEWELRY
Lauren Blais

Lauren Blais' jewelry is a homage to the Victorian era: enchanting lockets made from sterling silver and wallpaper etch, chunky cluster necklaces that tell stories from the past. Taking her inspiration from cabinets of curiosities and mourning rituals, and exploring the nature of ornamentation, the young artist's work is textured with history and nostalgia. From cuff links featuring bumblebees frozen in resin to floral-engraved chain bracelets, everything this Somerville metalsmith creates is gorgeous, haunting and irresistible.

MEN'S VINTAGE STORE

Bobby From Boston

Whether Rat Pack, tweedy or rockabilly, Bobby From Boston has everything a snappily dressed man longs to wear. Bargain-seeking upper-crusters and the costumers behind flicks like Titanic and A Beautiful Mind shop at this nationally known treasure trove. Inside, you'll find gear ranging from monocles and flasks to vintage leather trunks housed alongside genuine military jackets, collegiate striped scarves and jaunty bowlers. In fact, the bow tie–strewn shop is so well-outfitted that more than one loyalist has asked to live there.

MOVE IN THE RIGHT DIRECTION

Centralization of Boston Fashion Week

No more neighborhood zig-zagging. No more parking issues. This year's Boston Fashion Week (Sept. 23–30) will be held under a 3,000-square-foot tent between the Mandarin Oriental Hotel and the Shops at the Prudential Center. At the ultimate celebration of the region's fashion talent, crowds of 250 observers will be able to watch models sashay down the catwalk enhanced by stage lighting and professional sound systems. Excuse us while we strut our way to the chic seats.

PARTY DRESSES

Mint Julep

Be it a prom or black-tie affair, Mint Julep delivers sure-thing frocks from Beth Bowley, Milly, BCBG and Susana Monaco. With a full selection of sizes and price points, customers without 24-inch waists or imperial credit lines can still walk out with something special. They stock so many cute little numbers—perfect for date nights and cocktail soirees—that a trip here is like raiding your best friend's closet. Party on.

SNEAKERS

Concepts

The undisputed leader of the local sneaker scene, this boutique began inside the Tannery in Harvard Square and is now its own stylish standalone shop. The space's city-slicker wood, glass and metal decor primes shoppers for what's in store: skateboard-lovin' Vans, streetwalking Converse and limited-edition Nikes. Only hardcore aficionados are allowed into the downstairs, members-only lounge, so try as you might, your high-style rubber may be told to hit the road. With the new fashion on your feet, your hasty retreat can become a trendsetting getaway.

WELCOME ADDITION

MassArt Made

Finally, the Massachusetts College of Art has opened the doors to its own boutique, cashing in on its astonishing talent pool. Monique Rancourts' spectacular tangles of aged-metal necklaces, Short Army's knit Mohawk hats and Amy Patacchiola's brooches doubling as hair clips are local pieces that will create standout looks. In addition to a selection of super-cool jewels, you'll find handbags and clothes by Pedro Romero and Ashley Conchieri. Run, don't walk to this hot spot for indie gifts and emerging talent.

WOMEN'S HIGH-END CLOTHING

Serenella

A certain boutique's Facebook page regularly reminds us that Boston harbors A-list style. Reese Witherspoon's piping-hot Giambattista Valli dress, Michelle Obama's Thakoon sheath and Halle Berry's Roberto Cavalli ensemble could be discovered on the racks at Serenella. Celebrating its 30th anniversary, Leslie Shupe's shop is the best spot this side of Rodeo Drive to snag hard-to-find international labels like Sophie Theallet and Alberta Ferretti.

Crush

Anne Hathaway may have slipped into a pair of ultra-skinny J Brand jeans at Beacon Hill's Crush, but the boutique's enthusiastic staff is skilled at making even no-namers feel like glitterati. Merchandise from House of Harlow, Shoshanna and Chelsea Flower breathes new life into wardrobes without breaking the bank. Savvy customers should take note of the store's private shopping appointments, parties and closet-cleanse services. It's out with the old and in with the new you.

WORST TREND

Jeggings

Consider this our grand mea culpa. One year ago, jeggings seemed poised for a closet-takeover. But let's be real. New For Your Louis Vuitton & Longchamp Bags!

Luxury handbag liners that protect, repair and restore your precious things.

www.audreyandemma.com

Form and function meet fashion and philanthropy in an original product from new company Audrey & Emma, based out of New York, New York. Company founder and former Bostonian Elissa West has created and designed the perfect product made to protect and eliminate "bag sag" in Louis Vuitton and Longchamp totes. Proceeds from the sale of each bag liner will benefit The Audrey Hepburn Children's Fund.

Why did you decide to launch Audrey & Emma?
I've always had an entrepreneurial sprit and a love of design and fashion. Audrey & Emma is a dream realized. Our handbag liners are designed specifically to protect Louis Vuitton and Longchamp handbags. The environmentally friendly products and packaging are exclusively made stateside with recycled materials, and a portion of each sale goes to the Audrey Hepurn Children's Fund.

Where does the name come from?
The name references two women who were iconic to me when I was growing up: Audrey Hepburn and Emma Caccia, my great-aunt. Emma carried herself in a way that exuded grace. She lead a simple life, but also had a great sense of adventure. She had personality and spunk in an era when such things were not the norm.

Where did the idea come from?
Ah, bag sag! I can't stand the look of it! I'd see handbags every day and how misshapen they looked, depending upon what was inside. I started carrying my planner as the base of my Louis Vuitton "Speedy," and one day realized that there was a need for this - to ensure the esthetic and protect the bag from pens, lip gloss and such. Every malleable bag is susceptible and deserves to be protected.

Why did you choose to donate to Audrey Hepburn's Children's Fund?
I believe you can't be beautiful on the outside without being beautiful on the inside. Audrey and Emma dedicated their lives giving to others. And we plan to carry on their tradition.

WOMEN'S HAIRCUT
LINDSEY BIEBER
AT JORGO SALON

WHETHER YOU'RE seeking long bohemian locks or short soft waves, Lindsey Bieber is your best bet. Realizing that one cut isn't for everyone, Bieber (no relation to Justin) works with a woman's hair type and face shape to create a flattering coif. No fear of having a 'do you can't do: Bieber ensures that clients can recreate their look at home. "Transforming people, honestly, is just so fun," she says. "To turn someone around in the chair and have someone say, 'This is the best haircut I've ever had.'"

WAXING / BLISS

BLISS SALON PRIDES ITSELF on making waxing as painless as possible, whether you're getting the basic, the betweeny or a full-on bikini. At Bliss Brazilian Bikini Bootcamp, technicians are trained in the salon's signature stripless wax, which is specially formulated to prevent pinching. Men can try a he-wax hair-removal treatment (a little off the top and sides) or the ultimate (take it all off!). And with new strips packaged for retail, face or body touch-ups are a snap.

BLOWOUT

Seth Selman at James Joseph Salon

Say goodbye to your frizzies and flyaways. When Seth Selman's not working the floor at James Joseph, he can be found preparing models to walk the Carolina Herrera runway (as he did for her fall/winter 2011 show) or on the sets of network makeover shows. Salon owner William George vouches for Selman's skill and focus, whether he's working with the loveliest locks or the most troublesome tresses. If the path from geek to sleek looks impossible, re-mane calm. There's a professional in our midst.

BROW SHAPING

Monica Salipante at Beaucage

Death to the unibrow, declares Monica Salipante. Already known as a master of the Brazilian bikini wax, Salipante is equally impressive above the eyeline. A veritable brow scientist, she shapes and sculpts, transforming both men and women. Salipante prefers a thicker style, and her technique entails "returning to the natural brow" to make customers look younger, less tired and more vibrant. "It's a small service with a big impact," she says. "It's a mini-makeover that makes your makeup look better."

COSMETICS

A Matter of Face

This tiny gem of a shop is packed with fragrant moisturizers and shaving products, a huge makeup selection, sweet-smelling essential oils and organic cosmetics. On a given day, the busy North End boutique might be hosting Makeup Madness parties, pre-wedding bridal primping or private consultations. You'll find products from Bliss, Darphin Skincare, Sara Happ, Paula Dorf, the Art of Shaving and others. The beauty of being the boss with limited shelf space? "If I don't like it, I can't sell it," owner Paula Tierney says. "I only have things in here that I like."

Emerge Spa Salon

A day at Emerge combines the best of a European-style spa and a high-end salon. Head-to-toe treatments include massage, caviar facials and nourishing body wraps. For something different, try the Hydrostorm, which employs steam, shower, waterfall, aromatherapy and color therapy. In the salon you'll find a battery of Trish McEvoy cosmetics, or you can opt for one of the sleekest blowouts in town. There's even an "unabashedly masculine" men's club with a flat-screen television. So sit yourself down on a chaise longue in their rooftop garden and feel as though you've risen above the fray.

EXERCISE CLASS, AEROBIC

Cardio Kickbox at Boston Sports Clubs

This endorphin-inducing rush is 55 minutes of high-intensity, choreographed martial arts movements. Get ready for the usual jabs, punches and roundhouse kicks, plus a mix of styles like karate and muay Thai. No matter which location you choose, BSC instructors make sure kickboxing kicks your butt—and have you coming back for more. (Fans of trainer Ashley Bogosian's classes are especially loyal.)

EXERCISE CLASS, MIND AND BODY

Core Fusion at Exhale

A die-hard Core Fusion following exists for one simple reason: The class works. Students build better butts, stronger abs and leaner thighs through a combination of core conditioning, Pilates, the Lotte Berk Method, interval cardio training and yoga. "Within a month you are going to feel a difference in how your clothes fit," says instructor Denise Crowe. With roughly 70 Core Fusion classes offered each week, plus a new Core Fusion boot camp, the workout is as flexible as your body soon will be.

EXERCISE CLASS, STRENGTH

Body Pump at Healthworks

This workout might leave you struggling to climb the stairs the following day, but you'll find a way to make it to the next round. Intense sessions strengthen the entire body, from glutes to lats. A typical music-fueled, high-energy class uses a step platform, a bar and various weights to build bone strength and density. Body Pump burns up to 600 calories per class—so you'll have your beach body before bikini season disappears.

FACIAL

Brad Duncan at Brad Duncan Skin Care

Duncan's treatments are "no fluff," results-oriented, age-defying marvels. A California native, Duncan is a certified specialist in Epicuren, a line of enzyme-based corrective and anti-aging skin care products originally used by doctors to treat burn scars. He also offers skin-friendly cosmetics, with new lines coming by the end of the year. Tools in hand, Duncan gently coaxes skin to its healthy best. With a business expansion in the works, we predict many more miracles in this blemish healer's future.

HAIR COLORIST

Jeffrey Lyle at Jeffrey Lyle Salon

At this small Back Bay salon, blondes do have more fun. A whiz with flaxen tresses when he worked at G Spa and Emerge Spa and Salon, Lyle says 95 percent of his clients, including funny-girl actress Anna Faris, are fair-haired. They trust him because, as he says, he's "a little OCD and meticulous with hair color." Lyle sticks to L'Oréal products, does little advertising and says his rewards come from making women look and feel good. We love his blonde ambition.

HAIR TREATMENT

Keratin Complex Treatment at Salon Mario Russo

A keratin complex treatment will tame the most unruly mane, leaving hair silky, soft and smooth every time. In two visits, stylists apply Coppola keratin, then shampoo, condition and blow dry to ensure a chic and sleek finish. It's the most intense conditioning treatment you can do for your hair, artistic director Sal Malafronte says, and the results should last about six months. Don't have time for a full treatment? The salon also offers a Brazilian blowout or the Keratin Express, both of which guarantee at least a month of high glossiness.

SALON

Salon Marc Harris

Marc Harris continues to expand his style empire in Boston with branches in the Back Bay, the Ritz-Carlton's Sports Club/LA and the Financial District. The anchor salon on Newbury Street recently moved to a swanky, 3,500-square-foot space up the street. Harris, a well-known master with the shears, says his business' success is based on a commitment to educating stylists—who are then well-armed with top-notch products by Goldwell, Kerastase, Moroccanoil and others. Here passion, precision and panache make for a winning combination.

SUBURBAN SALON

James Joseph, Medford

Brace yourself for a suburban secret: James Joseph, the posh Newbury Street salon, also produces perfectly manicured manes in Medford. At about $45–$75 a cut, the suburban salon has all the great perks without the frizz- and frazzle-inducing fight for parking. A few stylists work both locations, says owner William George, and many junior stylists spend time in the Back Bay salon before moving up I-93. Life isn't so bad in the 'burbs.

WELCOME ADDITION

Trephin

Trephin's custom-made Italian furniture sets the art deco/neo-Victorian aesthetic of this Downtown Crossing salon. Brian Rand, a native of mid-coast Maine, and Moe Smith, a color specialist who's bounced between Boston and New York, co-own the business. Their goal is to relieve your stress by giving you a great haircut in a welcoming environment. The salon's five stylists are trained in innovative techniques, like balayage hair-painting for color. The result is high-fashion hair that's totally wearable. Bravo!

WORKOUT CLOTHING

Lululemon Athletica

Whether you're hoofing down the Esplanade, stretching on a yoga mat or pumping iron, these athletic clothes perform as beautifully as they look. Fitness fashionistas know the yoga pants (available in several lengths) are guaranteed to make their bottom half look like their better half. The go-to label for cute wrap-arounds, chic hoodies, high-performance tanks and bras that don't quit, Lululemon's togs transition from yoga studio chic to streetwear in a snap. While the stores provide fantastic service, it's no stretch to say their free shipping is a strong perk.

FLORIST

Blooms of Hope

PAIRING OWNER NICOLE Pirani's love of flowers with her passion for giving back, this studio provides brides with gorgeous bouquets, then uses half of the profits to buy flowers for a dozen or so nonprofits. Among them are homeless shelters, Community Cooks, the Children's Room and, Pirani's personal favorite, Room to Grow, which helps young families living at the poverty line. A bonus for brides: spend more than $5,000 and the choice of charity is yours.

BAND/DJ

Boston Common Band

Here's a fresh counter to all those aging chanteuses belting out Katy Perry tunes. This group pulls double duty, providing a DJ whenever the six-piece band goes on break, so the momentum never slows down. Drummer Jonathan Wiegratz says the non-stop show encompasses "everything from old-school favorites to '80s hits to crowd-pleasers." The dynamic group of Berklee grads and current college musicians even comes equipped with a $25,000, state-of-the-art sound and lighting rig. Requests, anyone?

CAKE

Party Favors

From chocolate-cupcake towers showered in Gerbera daisies to geometric stacks of carrot cake wrapped in azure fondant ribbons, Party Favors confections never disappoint. Choose from 11 cake flavors, 14 fillings and six frostings for a dessert that's as personal as your love story. With decadent options like French mocha buttercream or white chocolate–raspberry mousse between layers of almond, lemon or spice, you can have your made-to-order cake and eat it, too.

CAKE TOPPER/ KEEPSAKE

Paper, Gowns and Glory

Aimee Empey reinvents the classic paper doll to craft elaborate, one-of-a-kind toppers and nuptial mementos. Her designs recreate the bride and groom down to the last stitch, incorporating their flowers, hairstyles and attire into miniature incarnations. Starting her business just a year ago, Empey's already collected a roster of major clients, including local event bigwig Bryan Rafanelli. "It's become a real labor of love for me," she says. "[They make] people so excited."

FAVOR

NEIL MORRIS FRAGRANCES

BOTTLE THE JOY and individuality of your special day with a fragrance. Although he has a line of ready-made unisex scents, Neil Morris' custom potions are what in-the-know brides desire. Morris, who has been creating perfumes for 30 years, builds the perfume directly on the skin—drop by drop—until it embodies the essence of an occasion. For a more individual touch, book Morris' traveling fragrance bar, which allows guests to create their own olfactory keepsake.

ENGAGEMENT RINGS

Joseph Gann Jewelers

The veteran staff at this jeweler has been helping couples though the ring-buying process for almost 80 years. Since 1933, they've stuck to a philosophy that promotes quality, affordability and service, which helps ease the prospect of dropping serious cash on a rock. They're also great about teaching customers the intricacies of diamond-lore, so you'll soon understand the difference between Asscher-cuts and marquises.

GOWN

Vera Wang Boston

Join Chelsea Clinton, Ivanka Trump, Uma Thurman and Jennifers both Garner and Lopez in the conga line of famous brides who wore Vera Wang down the aisle. Awash in silks and tulles, the airy Newbury Street store will bring any bride to wedded bliss, as it's stocked with Cinderella ball gowns, strapless silk mermaid dresses and silk crepe sheaths. Though the boutique has a strict no-cameras policy, friendly consultants help customers find the picture-perfect look among endless, elegant options.

HAIR

Janet Warner at Salon Marc Harris

Clients fly 31-year industry vet Janet Warner to locales like New York, St. Thomas and Jamaica so she can craft their coifs for the aisle. Though Warner is happy to tame tresses in any style, a growing number of her brides opt for loose, natural locks and softer updos that are "a little less princess-prom, a little more red carpet." Insisting upon prenuptial hair trials, Warner experiments with different looks before helping the bride determine the perfect wedding-day 'do. No matter the aesthetic, her looks are consistently a cut above.

INVITATIONS
À Deux Bespoke Bridal Paper

After flipping through "50-pound books fondled by hundreds of people," Kelli Parker sought a unique approach for her wedding invitations. In 2008, she turned her do-it-yourself initiative into a full-time business. Now Parker works with fabrics, imported papers, plastics, metals, furs and crystals to create one-of-a-kind designs that are never, ever repeated. She recently sent out 150 wood-carved invitations for a couple marrying in a Vermont barn. Just call her the material girl.

MAKEUP
Dana Chasen at Beauty Muse Bridal

Her resume includes working as a national artist for Trish McEvoy, a stint on Bobbi Brown's elite New York team and doing the makeup for the Robert Downey Jr. wedding. But Dana Chasen continues to beautify Boston brides with her company, Beauty Muse Bridal. After priming the client's skin and shaping her brows, Chasen helps the bride "create the best version of herself" with a palette that's long-lasting and camera-ready. Next up? Her own wedding on Martha's Vineyard this September.

PHOTOGRAPHER
Ashley O'Dell at Ashley O'Dell Photography

This shutterbug's color-drenched photos showcase her non-traditional approach. For instance, framing a couple behind a shower of falling red apples, or a shot of a bride and groom standing near Crane Beach, in which rich green grass contrasts against an endless pink-and-blue sky. O'Dell, 28, doesn't take many action shots; she directs couples so that she can get images that represent the beauty of their big day. "Life isn't always perfectly photographic," she says. A recent coup: her work was featured in Brides Magazine.

PLACE TO REGISTER
Koo de Kir

From a classic club chair to the Isamu Noguchi 1950s-style paper floor lamp, Koo de Kir is where wedding registries achieve nirvana. Kristine Irving's Beacon Hill shop has an eclectic mix of contemporary and vintage furniture, jewelry, handbags, glassware, and bath and body products. Its name, a playful, phonetic spelling of the French phrase meaning "to take the breath away," should serve as fair warning: Be prepared for some happy gasps and grateful exhalations.

BRIDESMAID DRESS
FLAIR BRIDESMAID BOUTIQUE

THE LEADING LADIES here are on a mission to save Boston bridesmaids from traditional taffeta-catastrophes. Manager Lindsay Simon's operating philosophy is that dresses "should be flattering, cute, and available in a variety of colors and sizes for a variety of body types." The shop's hottest sellers are short, deeply hued frocks in chiffon and raw silk shantung by designers like Jenny Yoo, Coren Moore and Lynn Lugo. With dresses ringing in around $200, your bridesmaids can invest in a look they'll love to wear again.

Recent nuptials have included eco-friendly setups, a fully stocked candy bar and a reception catered by a late-night sausage cart. A planner who is "passionate about falling in love, but also passionate about staying true" to her clients, Gross is the go-to woman for couples more interested in celebrating their marriage than in convention.

FARM-TO-TABLE wedding-day meals from Season to Taste minimize environmental impact without compromising flavor. Chef/owner Robert Harris worked at East Coast Grill, Rialto and Olives before starting his full-service catering business, where he relies mostly on locally sourced meats and veggies. Before the event, he meets with brides and grooms to customize a menu that his crew cooks on site. "We want to blow people away with our food," he says. "The only thing we won't offer is what's out of season."

NIGHTS IN THE MUSEUM

STARTING JULY 7, the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum hosts the fiscally prudent art date du jour: its 10th annual Neighborhood Nights. Every other Thursday evening until Aug. 4, admission to the palace is gratis and includes family-friendly activities like live music, sketching in the courtyard garden, scavenger hunts and storytelling. It's a nod to Boston's rich heritage; but take note of the work site in back to glimpse the Gardner's rising new wing and the city's cultural future. . . NICHOLAS SOBEL

Submit listings by fax (617-859-1446), by mail to "Calendar: Cityscope" or by e-mail to cityscope@improper.com. Include address, phone number, date, time, price, nearest T stop and a brief description of the event. Deadline is four weeks prior to publication. Listings not accepted over the phone.

Go With the Glow

Hope Floats The Lantern Festival, held July 14 at Forest Hills Cemetery, brings together Bostonians who wish to honor lost loved ones. Inspired by Japanese Bon customs, participants write inscriptions on paper lanterns before floating them on a lake, a Buddhist tradition dating back 500 years. Chinese, Irish and American musicians provide accompaniment. Hilary White

A portion of the proceeds benefits the New School of Music.

Howl for Housing Howl at the Moon, 184 High St., Boston (617-367-6447, ext. 28). mhsa.net. MBTA: Red Line to South Station. 5:30 pm. $25. Attendees enjoy cocktails, appetizers and dueling pianos. Proceeds benefit the Massachusetts Housing and Shelter Alliance.

Thursday, July 21

Tale Spin There may be flying carpets in 1001, but don't expect any Disney magic when the show lands at the Boston Center for the Arts on July 15. Sure, Aladdin and Sinbad are along for the ride, but Jason Grote's reimagining of The Arabian Nights takes a serious turn, nodding to the tragedy of 9/11 and the ways in which the Middle East has impacted Western culture. Kathleen Godbold

Movies Edited by Kyle Wright

Capsules by Sean Burns

The Art of Getting By ★ This is the kind of indie movie that makes you hate indie movies. Insufferable Freddie Highmore (all grown-up since Finding Neverland) stars as George, a mop-headed teenager prone to reading Camus in the cafeteria and wearing long black trenchcoats. George has decided that since we'll all eventually die, there's no point in doing homework. What's obnoxious about The Art of Getting By is that it takes George's existential plight seriously. The school's supposedly unattainable beauty (Emma Roberts) tries to seem dangerous by smoking cigarettes but practically begs the young nerd to have sex with her. The film amounts to a pathetic game of narcissistic roleplay in which a not especially talented director (Gavin Wiesen) imagines his own fan-fiction version of high school, because now he's got enough connections to enlist some semi-famous people and Steven Spielberg's weird-looking daughter to play all the bit parts. Just because it happened to you doesn't make it interesting. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Bad Teacher ★ ½ Cameron Diaz gives it her all as a slutty, gold-digging English teacher fond of snoozing through class with a hangover. Embezzling school funds for a boob-job she hopes will impress her dorky sugar daddy–to-be, Justin Timberlake, she smokes weed, struts and generally tries way too hard in this depressingly inert effort. Directed by Jake Kasdan, the film lurches from one under-realized set piece to the next, setting up jokes that never pay off and stranding a talented ensemble in a vortex of missed opportunities. Most of the actors wind up drenched in flop-sweat, throwing themselves into caricatured performances that clash with the banal surroundings and under-developed screenplay. The movie looks awfully cheap, and it's edited in such a way that allows failed jokes to hang in the air for eternity. Credit Jason Segel, who breezes into the proceedings as a happy, horny gym teacher, off-handedly dropping one-liners while everyone around him plays to the rafters. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Beginners ★★ Writer-director Mike Mills' skittish but heartfelt sophomore effort begins with a fascinating premise: After the death of his wife, a 75-year-old retired museum curator (Christopher Plummer) tells his son that he's gay, and proceeds to spend the last four years of his life living it up. Freewheeling across a fractured narrative structure, with more than a passing nod to the French New Wave, Beginners offers tantalizing glimpses of the past and fragments of a greater picture. Unfortunately, we remain mired mostly in the present, with Ewan McGregor playing the depressed son disposing of his now-deceased father's personal effects, adopting the old man's cloyingly cute Jack Russell terrier and generally bumming out the party. And what a party it was, judging from these brief, early glimpses. Although he's the most interesting character, Plummer is banished to the sidelines almost immediately. In the end, Beginners never goes anywhere. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Buck ★★★ Though we never see Buck Brannaman actually whisper to a horse, his folksy drawl is so soothing it's no surprise he was the inspiration for Nicholas Evans' novel The Horse Whisperer and informed Robert Redford's performance in the 1998 film. His training favors positive reinforcement and benefits from an almost supernatural patience. Brannaman exudes empathy for these animals with his "gentle and firm" mantra. Looking a bit like Anderson Cooper without the harsh angles, the film's subject carries himself with a laconic calm that's compulsively watchable, even when it starts to feel like there's nothing in life that cannot be boiled down to an equestrian metaphor. He's good company. Clearly enraptured, director Cindy Meehl follows Brannaman on the road for a stretch, overindulging in panoramic Western vistas that test the limits of digital photography. Buck's secret weapon arrives when we become privy to Brannaman's troubled past. There's something deeply moving about watching a man transcend his tragic childhood and use the hard lessons he's learned for the good of others. (At Kendall Square.)

Green Lantern ★ ½ Enough with the superheroes already. DC Comics' mega-budget fiasco stars Chevy Chase wannabe Ryan Reynolds as a hotshot fighter pilot recruited by aliens to become an intergalactic space cop. Trouble is, he doesn't seem all that interested in the job. In fact, Reynolds' Hal Jordan spends most of the endless running time shrugging his shoulders and giving up, even while the fate of Earth hangs in the balance. He's just not a compelling figure, plucked from his regular life and shot outside our solar system with nary a moment of excitement. I've

There's nothing worse than a blown Transformer.

Transformers: Dark of the Moon ★
Starring Shia LaBeouf, Rosie Huntington-Whiteley, Frances McDormand, John Turturro and John Malkovich. Written by Ehren Kruger. Directed by Michael Bay. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

Robert Zuckerman

TO SAY DARK OF THE MOON is the best Transformers movie is hardly saying anything at all. The picture surpasses its notorious forebears by being visually accomplished, occasionally coherent and nowhere near as jaw-droppingly racist as the two films that came before. Am I damning with faint praise? Well, it's also mind-numbingly boring.

The second installment, 2009's Transformers: Revenge of the Fallen, felt like a curdled blast from director Michael Bay's diseased id. Shot without the benefit of a screenplay thanks to the writers' strike, the movie lurched from one disjointed set piece to another, attempting to plaster over obvious seams with broad humor, rank misogyny and two staggeringly stereotypical, gold-toothed ghetto-bots who took pride in the fact that they never learned how to read. (This was an important plot point.)

It also had an enormous robot with wrecking balls for testicles.

Despite making $402 milllion at the box office, even Bay eventually admitted that the movie was crap. So Dark of the Moon finds him on his best behavior, spinning an absurd alternate history that kicks off with the 1960s space race and an unconvincing presidential cameo using stock footage of John F. Kennedy. Did you know that we only landed on the moon so that we might procure alien technology created by Leonard Nimoy's Sentinel Prime?

This cheap hijacking of the Apollo mission stings even more thanks to the participation of Buzz Aldrin, playing himself. Somehow, it's more embarrassing than the time he got kicked off Dancing With the Stars. No wonder Neil Armstrong doesn't do public appearances. How does one go from walking on the moon to swapping dialogue with Optimus Prime? ("Greetings, fellow space traveler." There are no more heroes.)

But for reasons that remain mysterious to me, Transformers rests on the plight of Shia LaBeouf's Sam Witwicky. Once a stammering teenager whose first car was a robot warrior from another world, he now just hangs around the ginormous android action, generally just getting in the way while doing a not-half-bad Baby John Cusack impersonation.

If you were unfortunate enough to have seen either of the previous pictures, you might remember that Megan Fox once played Sam's improbably hot girlfriend. Thanks to tabloid trauma (and the disgust of executive producer Steven Spielberg, according to GQ), Fox was replaced by Victoria's Secret model Rosie Huntington-Whiteley, who is introduced from her scantily clad backside in maximum leer-vision. I do wonder why women in Bay's movies always have such moist lips, which glisten in his perpetual sunset.

The first hour and a half finds Sam taking a desk job at eccentric John Malkovich's corporate widget-making headquarters. Soaked in bronzer and bellowing his dialogue in some sort of accent, Malkovich is not the kind of actor who should be encouraged to "go over the top."

There's all sorts of terrible comedy, most of which involves The Hangover's Ken Jeong as an even-more-eccentric-than-Malkovich company vice president, but for our amusement, everyone keeps thinking that he and Sam are lovers. (Gay panic is hilarious!) It's an appalling workplace comedy for a good 90 minutes.

And then the angry, evil robots kill Chicago.

No joke. Thousands of people are slaughtered in cold blood. We see the evil Decepticons fire some crazy electromagnetic shotguns at innocent, fleeing bystanders, stripping the skin from their bones and sending skulls rolling down Lower Wacker Drive. Your personal mileage may vary, but I had a hard time reconciling the feature-length wackiness with the many people who were murdered on the way to the third act.

Some folks have been applauding Transformers: Dark of the Moon's final reels, as they are (no shit) a solid hour of rock'em, sock'em robot-fighting action, toppling skyscrapers and wreaking devastation on a scale never seen before in movies. Personally, I was so bored I wanted to take a nap.

Hamstrung by the constraints of 3-D technology, Bay finally has to hold a shot for more than three seconds and plan out his action sequences. This picture is full of long dolly moves that practically beg us to soak in the mass destruction. But he still has no idea how to pace a scene. There are no stakes, and the action never rises or falls. There's just one single note of sensory overload. After 15 minutes of this I was checking my watch, a half hour later I was rolling my eyes.

It all finally grew so dull that I found myself longing for the weird wrongness of Revenge of the Fallen. At least that wasn't boring. ✖✖✖ never seen so many gargantuan special effects sequences occur in front of so many nonchalant actors. Even the extras can't muster any awe. Dense with mythology, nothing makes sense and the whole shebang feels blasé, constricted to soap opera shenanigans on a crummy air force base. Note to future comic book adapters: It's probably not a good idea to have your main villain be an angry cloud. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Hangover Part II ★ ½ Second verse, same as the first—except this time without any of the funny parts. Most of what made director Todd Phillips' raunchy 2008 original such a beloved blockbuster was the thrill of discovery. At heart a detective story, the tale of three henpecked suburbanites retracing their steps after a bachelor party benefited from an unfamiliar cast and surprising situations. This unnecessary sequel slavishly follows that exact formula almost scene for scene, upping the ante with gross-out squalor and an air of violent unpleasantness, while remaining almost entirely devoid of wit. This time Bangkok stands in for Vegas, there's a monkey instead of a baby, the missing tooth is replaced by a facial tattoo and the prostitutes… well, don't ask. Much like Mike Myers' dreaded Austin Powers sequels, it trots out all the jokes you laughed at last time and beats them like a dead horse. Shockingly well-staged and expertly photographed by people who really should know better, it's a cynical, ugly cash grab. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Midnight in Paris ★★★ ½ I know. Everyone always tells you that the new one is Woody Allen's comeback film. I've been burned by that rap, too. But this is a lighter-than-air, casually profound piece that calls to mind The Purple Rose of Cairo in its magical realism and ruefully funny undercurrents. Owen Wilson stars as a hack Hollywood screenwriter vacationing in Paris who finds himself magically transported to the 1920s, where he boozes it up with Ernest Hemingway, F. Scott Fitzgerald and Adrien Brody's hilariously self-infatuated Salvador Dalí. The punchline comes early: While Wilson was always pining for "the good old days," once he gets there, he discovers that everybody else shares his longing. Gorgeously shot by cinematographer Daris Khondji and directed by Allen with a care we haven't seen in eons, it's a deceptively slight exploration of nostalgia as beautiful quicksand. The only thing keeping this from being a classic is Allen's typically misogynistic treatment of Rachel McAdams' character. Otherwise, it's lovely. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Page One: Inside The New York Times ★★★ Inherently fascinating but fatally flawed, director Andrew Rossi's documentary about the old gray lady's struggle for solvency bites off way more than one movie can chew. Granted limited access during an exceedingly dire time for the newspaper industry, Rossi attempts to chronicle the death match between old and new media by trotting out some familiar talking heads and wondering what will become of our great nation without The New York Times setting the agenda. More interesting is a portrait of the foul-mouthed journalist David Carr, chain-smoking and trash-talking his way through one paltry Media Desk assignment after another, insulting folks who are unlucky enough to raise his ire. This scattershot picture doesn't attempt to answer the many questions it raises and fails to find a groove during the later reels. When Carr sinks his teeth into an honest investigative piece, we finally see the editorial push and pull of responsible journalism, a striking contrast to all the bloggers who hogged the screen beforehand. (At Kendall Square.)

Pirates of the Caribbean: On Stranger Tides ★★ Um, did anybody ask for this? Truth be told, the fourth installment in this overlong series, based on an eight-minute theme-park ride, isn't a particularly terrible movie. Whereas director Gore Verbinski's first three chapters frustratingly buried genuine visual wit and flights of imagination beneath labyrinthine legends and nonsense, director Rob Marshall's maiden voyage at the helm is skimpy and almost defiantly pedestrian. It's just not interesting enough to get angry about. Yes, Johnny Depp is back as Captain Jack Sparrow, our perpetually blotto, cowardly anti-hero. In the first, Pirates: Curse of the I Forget What It Was Called, Depp's effeminate sashaying and slurred speech felt like a grand, delightful act of sedition within an otherwise stodgy Disney product. But familiarity breeds contempt, and there's not really enough of a character here to justify yet another trip back to this same shallow well. There's no sense of scope or grandeur in this iteration; everybody is just punching a time clock and setting up the next sequel. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Super 8 ★★ Proving you can mimic a visual signature without understanding any of the reasons why it's successful, writer-director J.J. Abrams fashions a slavishly nostalgic tribute to Steven Spielberg films of the late '70s and early '80s. Cribbing entire shot-lists from Close Encounters and E.T., Super 8 tells the tale of kids from broken homes trying to make a zombie movie, when a train accident suddenly frees a ferociously disappointing alien. Abrams nails all his mentor's patented slow-dolly shots toward characters gazing upwards in wide-eyed wonder, but he's lacking Spielberg's sense of magic—not to mention his storytelling efficiency. Super 8 doesn't make much sense and lacks momentum. Plot complications are arbitrary and so easily reversed, you could probably remove any given reel of the film without altering the outcome. Saving it from complete disaster is young Joel Courtney as a lovestruck movie nerd, and an amazing turn from Elle Fanning as the heartsick gal of his dreams. The rest is bad karaoke. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Tree of Life ★★★ ½ "Other people make movies; Terrence Malick builds cathedrals," my brilliant colleague Matt Zoller Seitz is fond of saying. This dream project for the director, some 30 years in the making, feels like the ultimate expression of Malick's particular worldview. With even the title flirting with self-parody, the picture seeks to reconcile one child's troubled upbringing in the 1950s with the entire history of the universe. It is by turns rapturous, astonishing and occasionally silly. I adore the ambition and am in awe of the accomplishment, even if I'm still not sure it all hangs together. Taking the form of a whispered prayer to a God who may or may not be listening, the fractured narrative unspools in symphonic movements. But after one viewing, I'm still not convinced that Malick is quite able to reconcile the quotidian with the cosmic. His final, surreal sequence on a mystical beach is unfortunate. But good heavens, the film is a wonder to behold. Malick's reach exceeds his grasp—but that is one hell of a reach. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Viva Riva! ★★★ Location, location, location. The Kinshasa underworld of Djo Munga's exuberantly sleazy debut is a roiling, congested hotbed of shakedowns, half-naked women and savage beatings. Returning home to the Democratic Republic of the Congo after a decade of dastardly deeds in nearby Angola, chipper young Riva (baby-faced Patisha Bay Mukuna) arrives with a hijacked petrol truck and a hankering for whores. Munga eschews the hand-wringing pieties one often associates with recent poverty-chic pictures in favor of lowbrow genre tropes. Kinshasa's appalling living conditions and ubiquitous corruption are all the more powerful for being presented with a cynical shrug. Constantly shifting alliances and other pulpy flourishes lend Viva Riva! the crude spirit of a Warner Brothers gangster picture from the 1930s, albeit one with an unexpectedly carnal edge. It's filthy, fatalistic and more fun to watch than it probably has any right to be. (At Kendall Square.)

X-Men: First Class ★★ ½ Opting for a top-to-bottom reboot after the dreadful Wolverine, Marvel Comics' most allegory-friendly franchise sets the wayback machine to the early 1960s for this diverting, if pointless, prequel. A surprisingly credible James McAvoy plays the young psychic Professor Charles Xavier, while movie-star in the making Michael Fassbender fills in for Ian McKellan as the embittered Holocaust survivor Magneto. Cobbled together from several different scripts and sped into production on a truncated 10-month schedule, X-Men: First Class is a rush-job that has a few moments good enough to make you wish the entire film was better. Helmed by Kick-Ass director Matthew Vaughn, with his camera set to maximum leer, the movie revels in Playboy Club fashions and scantily clad coeds. Suffering from a severe case of overcrowding, First Class doesn't even get around to the obligatory training montage until over 90 minutes into the picture. By the time everyone is done introducing themselves, it's already time for the climactic action scene. Should a sequel be in the cards, a little patience would go a long way. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Arbor Day

Family Tree Playwright Andrea Dunbar debuted The Arbor in 1980 to a storm of controversy due to its gritty depiction of life in an English slum. Clio Barnard's 2010 "documentary" of the same name—shown as part of Arts-Emerson's Festival Focus series on July 21—introduces Dunbar to a new generation. To accurately chronicle the writer's troubled life, Barnard used "verbatim theater" techniques: Actors lip-synch their lines over recorded reminiscences of Dunbar's family and friends. The technique paid artistic dividends, as the film was nominated for a 2010 BAFTA. Jeffrey Cattel

BYTES AND PIECES

Gomez's pop finds a personality in the sum of collaborative parts.

Gomez plays the Paradise Rock Club on July 12.

Brantley Gutierrez

NO ONE IN THE BAND IS named Gomez. The English group takes its moniker from a sign posted outside the social club where they played their first gig; someone hoping to flag down a friend had posted a notice reading, "Gomez in here."

The name stuck, and despite creative and commercial success, stability and longevity, Gomez remains a hidden commodity.

"We're under the radar everywhere," says guitarist/keyboardist Tom Gray, one of the group's three singers. "That's just the kind of band we are—apart from very early in our career, when we had a big rush of hype around us. Which was completely unrepresentative of the band anyway, because we weren't playing the most obvious music... We expected to sell a few records and ended up selling millions."

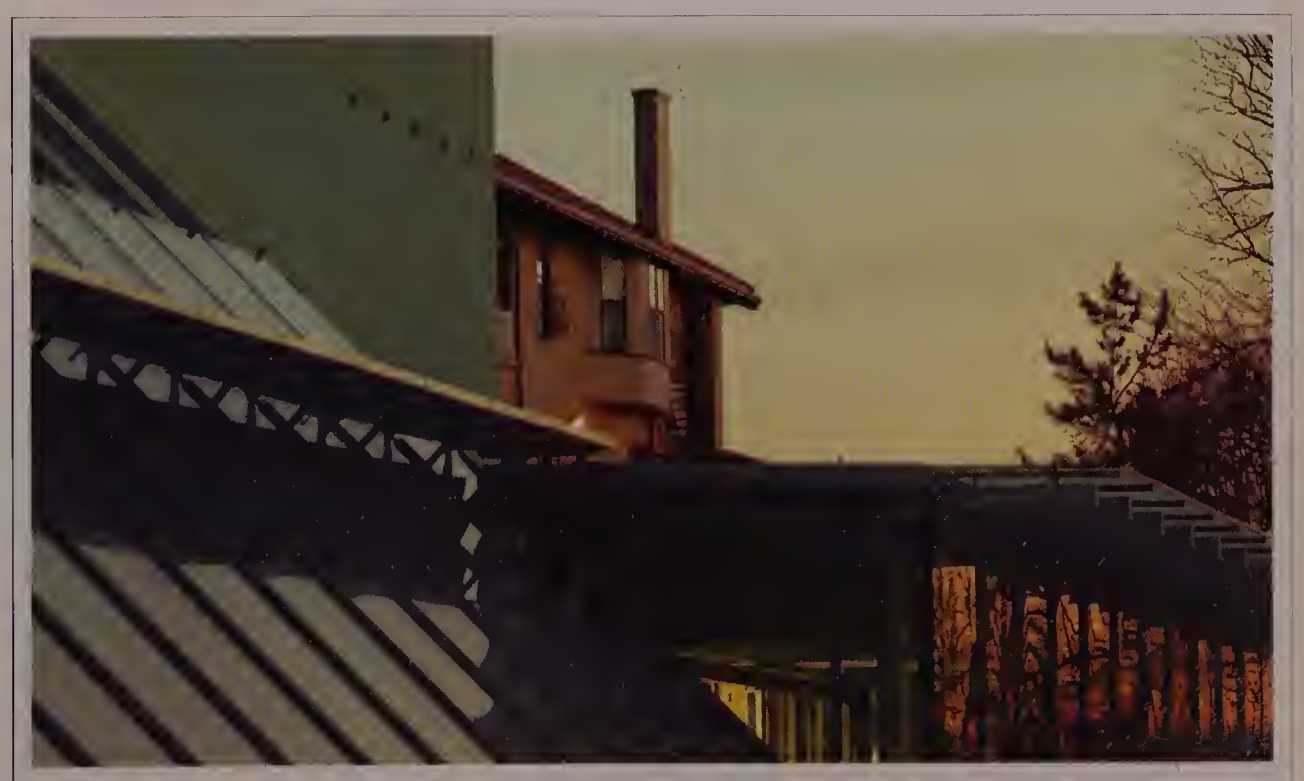
Such success is inevitable for a band that wins the Mercury Music Prize for the year's best U.K. album, as Gomez did with its 1998 debut, Bring It On. And though the quintet's membership has stayed the same in the face of acclaim, its sound and profile have shifted along the way.

"We started Gomez with the express wish of trying to make records like people in the late '60s," Gray says from his home in Brighton, England. "Not to make music that sounded like the late '60s—far from it—but the discussions we had were, 'Why is it that records have become so conservative stylistically and in [terms] of genre?' The market's about that, but music isn't."

The music on Gomez's early albums and tours offered a particularly varied amalgam of folk, blues, psychedelia and alternative rock. Over time the group's sound has grown streamlined, such as on the tuneful and deceptively rich new release Whatever's on Your Mind.

"We've never tried to make our records more accessible," Gray says. "If you go back and listen to our first records, they're full of pop songs, but more raggedy pop songs, the sound of 19- and 20-year-olds as opposed to guys who are in their mid-30s."

Early on, the Gomez guys weren't even that interested in song forms. "We'd just start a song and halfway through start playing a different song completely," he says. "That certainly was a big characteristic of our early records. Maybe we should go back to that and people would say, 'Oh, that's so experimental,' again."



Gomez also keeps its creative process fresh through technology, beginning with a blend of acoustic and electronic instrumentation from the rhythm section up. "Even from when we started, sampling was something we were doing on a regular basis," Gray says. "Computer technology is as normal for me as playing guitar."

In turn, it facilitates the songwriting process for a band split between homes in the U.S. and England. Group members are able to modify each other's demo recordings online to craft the best sound. "Gomez is a genuine collaboration, and a lot of bands aren't," Gray says. "Especially if you have several personalities, you have to be ready to have people change what you've done."

That all-for-one relationship goes back to college, when Gray, drummer Olly Peacock and singer-guitarist Ian Ball met up with singer-guitarist Ben Ottewell and bassist Paul Blackburn.

"We're a gang, we're a family, and that underwrites everything else," says Gray. "The reason why we've been able to keep going strong in the face of people not really understanding [the music], or maybe not getting it as much as we would like them to, is because we have bonds that go much tighter and deeper than most bands. We can act as a unit without having to really think about it." ***

Stealing the Show

Sex, Rx and Rock 'n' Roll The Rx Bandits have been prescribing blunt guitar riffs and unconventional time signatures to their followers for more than 15 years. It's not often that a listener struggles to put a finger on a band's sound, but the Bandits have managed to succeed in transcending an unlikely mixture of genres. The unique and sometimes chaotic backing of brass and guitar strings paired with the raw vocals of lead singer Matt Embree has ducked every definition except for "loud." Catch them on back-to-back nights at the Middle East Club Downstairs on July 14–15. Kathleen Godbold

Circle the Globe

Boarding Past Journey back to the time of ocean liners and steamer trunks, when a glamorous trip across the Atlantic took three weeks—plus a lookout for U-boats and icebergs. The Grand Circle Gallery's latest exhibition, Travels Through Africa, unveils early-20th-century posters advertising the allure of exotic locales. Artifacts like jewelry and tribal costumes add heft to the proceedings, while curious ephemera like vintage luggage tags will leave you longing for a vacation. Check in before the exhibition packs up on July 30.

Girl Empowered

The Great Escape

Roland Merullo's no stranger to writing stories about people facing unimaginable challenges (since his 1991 debut, his characters have dealt with murders and terminal illnesses), so it's no surprise to hear that his latest involves a woman trying to free herself from a warped family and the New Hampshire commune she calls home. The Revere-born author's The Talk-Funny Girl is an inspirational tale written in the style for which Merullo is famous. He'll share his own inspiration on July 7 at Porter Square Books. Hilary White

AFFAIR OF STATE

Well, He's Probably Better Than Wagner

The State House is known more for political antics than acoustics, but the Great Hall was an eminently appropriate place for the Boston Landmarks Orchestra to host its annual gala.

The evening introduced the group's new maestro, Christopher Wilkins, while honoring founder Charles Ansbacher. On hand for the festivities: Ansbacher's widow, Ambassador Swanee Hunt, State House top dog Deval Patrick, Back Bay doyenne Pamela Humphrey, the über-philanthropic Wendy Shattuck and Sam Plimpton, board chair Jeff Makholm, yummy mummies Rachael Goldfarb and Penelope Savitz, the hot and heavy Adi Toledano and Molly Schoeck, stunning young things Molly Storer and Lindsay Lightman, and the delightful Priscilla Douglas.

The performances all earned standing ovations (and not just because there was no place to sit down), while the wine flowed like the legislature was in session.

The evening's most amusing remark: Boston Philharmonic conductor Ben Zander, who was leaving the next day for a tour of Eastern Europe, said, "I'm taking 150 teenagers, and no chaperone except for Mahler."

In Memoriam

Boston has lost one of its swans, as Truman Capote might have put it. Susan Spooner was a true lady—gracious, vivacious, quick to laugh or to lend an ear, with understated but impeccable taste and an eye for beautiful things. Needless to say, she was a staggering beauty, as well as a wonderful mother and the wife of my mentor and colleague, John, which is how she became my friend. I'm tremendously proud to be able to say that, but I'm certainly not alone. She was someone anyone would instantly want as a friend.

Much of that had to do with her generosity of spirit, which on a civic scale is obvious in the legacy she left behind at the Huntington Theatre and the New England Aquarium, to name only two of the many beneficiaries of her tremendous positive energy. On a personal level, it's obvious in the fact that a mutual friend said to me, after hearing that she had died, "I didn't even know she was sick." Not that Susan was embarrassed by her illness. She just didn't like to make anyone feel uncomfortable. And so her death leaves us with an unsolvable riddle: The world has lost some of its beauty, yet it's a much more beautiful place for her having been here.

All's Fair in Fashion and War

I was robbed. I say this without rancor, but at the 15th annual Rose Garden Party to benefit Park Arts, my hat was, quite simply, beyond fabulous.

The party took place in the magnificent Kelleher Rose Garden in the Back Bay Fens, and guests sported chapeaus of every description while sipping Champagne, nibbling tasty tidbits and taking time to smell the roses (for the record, the most fragrant variety was Golden Celebration).

Of course, if there's a hat contest, there have to be judges, and therein lies the rub: I was one of them, along with hat designer Kathleen McDermott and the Museum of Fine Arts' Katie Getchell. This, of course, disqualified me, which is why I bear no ill will toward Milton popinjay Brian Saipe and his vintage boater (which paled next to my Ted Baker original). The other winners included Ruby Andrew, whose New Orleans funeral hat won Most Elegant, Marianna Toroyan, whose pheasant-feathered number was Best Garden Party Hat, and Holly McGrath, whose hat was elegantly decorated in Boston Bruins colors with black crepe and yellow orchids. Then there was Linda Dineen, who incorporated a cellphone holder into her fascinator, and Mary Kakas, sporting a replica of Pippa Middleton's from the royal wedding. Also on hand: the bubbly Connie Brown, Gardner head honcha Anne Hawley, the beautiful-in-blue Mimi LaCamera, outgoing MassArt head Kay Sloan, power chick Dora Lewin, BSO factotum Kathleen Drohan and one guest who explained her bareheadedness by saying, "My hat's off to whomever got all these roses to go into full bloom on cue."

The most amusing exchange was from three friends, discussing their worst blind dates: "I flew to L.A. to meet this guy."

"Mine was in Italy."

"Well, I went on a three-day blind date at sea."

To which the other two responded in unison: "OK, you win." ✖✖✖

The Interpretation of Food

A friend told me she had a dream in which chef Dante de Magistris used oatmeal to glop together a habitable igloo. My first thought was that real estate nightmares must be on the rise. My second was that oatmeal is a symbol for something, like moral fiber, or Scottish diets, or a hankering for wood mulch that's been violently boiled.

Food, like everything else, is packed with semiotics. Bread usually signifies plenty. Wine means joy. Watermelon and fried chicken mean racism. A chicken shawarma means bacterial gastroenteritis. Bananas, sausages and cucumbers probably mean something, too. Dunno. Maybe stamp-collecting.

The salient point of the dream, though, is that chefs have crept, like greasy-fingered ninjas, into our subconscious. They're everywhere. On reality TV, at parties, on nearly every page of this magazine. As I hunch over this keyboard, a new celebrity chef is probably springing, Athena-like, out of the head of Ken Oringer. Ew.

Is this pernicious, or just a symptom of mass gluttony? On the one hand, chefs are mere craftsmen who tickle one of the physical senses. Any emotions you feel from eating a bone-in prime rib-eye are those of an animal at feed, or, at the most refined, those of happy associations with good company and cheer. On the other hand, chefs do a service by showing us our own kitchen incompetence. When I dine at Del Frisco's, I'm reminded that, alas, if I tried to make sesame-seared tuna at home, I'd start a two-alarm fire.

And there's something to be said, after all, about tickling the senses.

MARKET DRIVEN

THE ADAGE SAYS, "Never let them see you sweat." But none of us have had employment trials like new Market chef de cuisine Matthew Barros. In addition to the interviews and the hidden scouts watching him work at Myers + Chang, the young New Bedford native faced a night of cooking for the man himself, Jean-Georges Vongerichten. Of course the legendary chef made him wait, and invent dishes from a mystery basket under his intimidating gaze. "It was just complete eyes locked onto me the whole time, looking to see if I had a clean station, clean jacket, clean apron," Barros says. "It was interesting, and nerve-racking." But once you're battle-tested by the boss, a demanding Boston public is a breeze.

It's not a Lower East Side deli, but from their Newton Centre kitchen, mother-and-son team Inna and Alex Khitrik prepare traditional Jewish fare that measures up to the gold standard. Corned beef fans shouldn't miss the house-cured brisket; it's neither as salty nor as shockingly pink as most versions, thanks to their nitrate-free curing process. Order it by the pound, or in a sandwich alongside a scoop of their shuba salad of beet, herring and potato. Or, starting in September, get it with a piece of homemade gefilte fish dolloped with beet horseradish, which lends it a slightly sweet, tear-inducing fire. ELIZABETH BOMZE

1. Use a firm-bristle brush and start at the lashline, blending EYESHADOW PRIMER → upward.

2. Apply ← EYE COLOR using a crease brush, sweeping inward from the outer corners in a windshield wiper motion.

3. Apply EYELINER → in a thin line at the inner corner and thicker in the center of the lashline. Then slightly angle it upward and out to create the cat-eye liner look.

4. Add a ← HIGHLIGHTING PENCIL to the tearline to brighten.

WHAT'S THE BUZZ?

A new place for caffeine in Cambridge

IN THE THRIVING Area IV, a neighborhood where geeks rule, naming a coffee bar after a physics term makes perfect sense. Dwelltime, which refers to a pause in a process that allows another process to occur, is the brainchild of the owners of Barismo, the cult-favorite coffee roaster in Arlington.

"There are a lot of engineers in our group," says co-owner Jaime van Schyndel, ratifying their nerd cred. And there's a lot of work to do before Dwelltime fulfills its mission of creating a shop "framed around an interactive coffee bar experience." Building out the old Hubley Auction space brings with it all the challenges of antique plumbing and electrical systems, as well as the refurbishment of tin ceilings and maple floors.

Once it opens in the next four to six weeks, Dwelltime will feature what van Schyndel calls "an outrageous coffee program" as well as breakfast and lunch fare "that's healthy but without a crunchy granola aesthetic."

IMPOSSIBILITY OR FORMULA FOR success? The just-opened Brahmin Restaurant and Lounge on Stanhope Street promises both nightly live entertainment and a conversation-friendly noise level. Co-owner Russ DeMariano, who also owns Red Sky near Faneuil Hall, says the lounge DJ will create "a New York-Miami type of vibe that's not being done around here." The menu features small plates (shocker), and, as befits the name, an extensive list of cocktails named for the Adamses and Cabots. Cabotini?

CODA'S NEW EXECUTIVE CHEF comes ready to tackle the savory and the sweet. That's because Graham Schave's background includes three years as Eastern Standard's pastry chef, plus stints at Veggie Planet and Ashmont Grill. So in addition to whipping up an everything-under-$20 menu that spotlights local produce, Schave makes all the desserts, including peach cobbler with basil ice cream.

Drink of the Moment

A Nozzle Idea

Conceived as a spin on the Dark and Stormy, 49 Social's original ↙ JAMAICAN JIM ($12) proved too labor-intensive. Both flambéeing and muddling pineapple requires more time than some customers are willing to cede. "Keep the bourbon, keep the ginger and add some beer," directed manager Samir Zaiter.

So bartender Elizabeth Powell (formerly of Union Bar and Grille) reworked the recipe. To a reduction of Dogfish Head 60 Minute IPA and fresh ginger, Powell adds bitters, bourbon and pineapple juice, which adds sweetness to the flavor and the nose.

Now the fun part: Instead of shaking or stirring, Powell mixes the drink in a whipped cream canister, which recarbonates the entire concoction. When sprayed through the barrel's nozzle, the liquid comes out as a froth that eventually settles. The pineapple's punch is subtler than expected, muting what otherwise might pack a wallop.

Cocktail fans and aficionados should order the Jamaican Jim at the bar, where they can watch the preparation. The presentation alone evokes Wonka-esque fizzy lifting drinks, and Powell's experimentation with unusual textures and sprays will keep you captivated.

The Stretch Run

A luscious elasticity is one of mozzarella's defining qualities. While commercial-grade cheeses tear like friable rubber bands, Giuseppe Argentieri's hand-pulled curds are twisted into knots like bundles of fine yarn. From an inconspicuous Everett kitchen, he sells munchkin-sized ciliegine and the larger ovoline, as well as burrata, ricotta and dry-aged scamorza. One of mozzarella's underappreciated qualities is, apparently, variety.

Tracks Star

Ellie Goulding is an English singer/songwriter. Her debut album, Lights, was an international success, garnering her a BRIT Award and an invitation to perform at the wedding of Prince William and Catherine Middleton. She appears at the House of Blues on July 27.

Do you feel pressure to be big in the U.S.?
It's not really like a pressure. Performing on Saturday Night Live was a surprise. We don't have it in the UK, so it's something you've heard about but never experienced.

Favorite song to perform?
I love to do "Animal" because it's a dance track about being completely lost in another person. It's like I'm obsessed with obsession.

Where'd you get the balls to cover Elton John's "Your Song"?
I did it for an advertisement, and it took off and became one of my biggest hits. Elton told me he loves it!

What was it like performing at the royal wedding?
I was completely blown away, just insanely happy. I'd met Prince William a few months before and thought he was amazing. I knew about the performance for a long time, but had to keep it secret.

Why do you run with your fans when touring?
It's a way for me to interact with them while doing something productive and healthy. We created the website ellieruns.com to get people in involved. It pumps me up.

Got plans for the next album?
It's still in the early stages. It's not so much a departure from what people are used to, it's more that I'm just moving away naturally.

CHANSON DES CHEFS:

A Ballad in Good Taste

It's true, our city's favorite chefs
Can make our taste buds sing.
They elevate the steak, the cod,
The deep-fried chicken wing.

But where they truly do excel
Is where they, too, compete.
And each and every one of them
Believes he is elite.

Though Jason Santos sings the blues
While missing television,
He's busy braising veal cheeks
Inside his own hell's kitchen.

And yet inferno also burns
At Dante's Cambridge spot
Where Mr. de Magistris always Cooks up something hot.

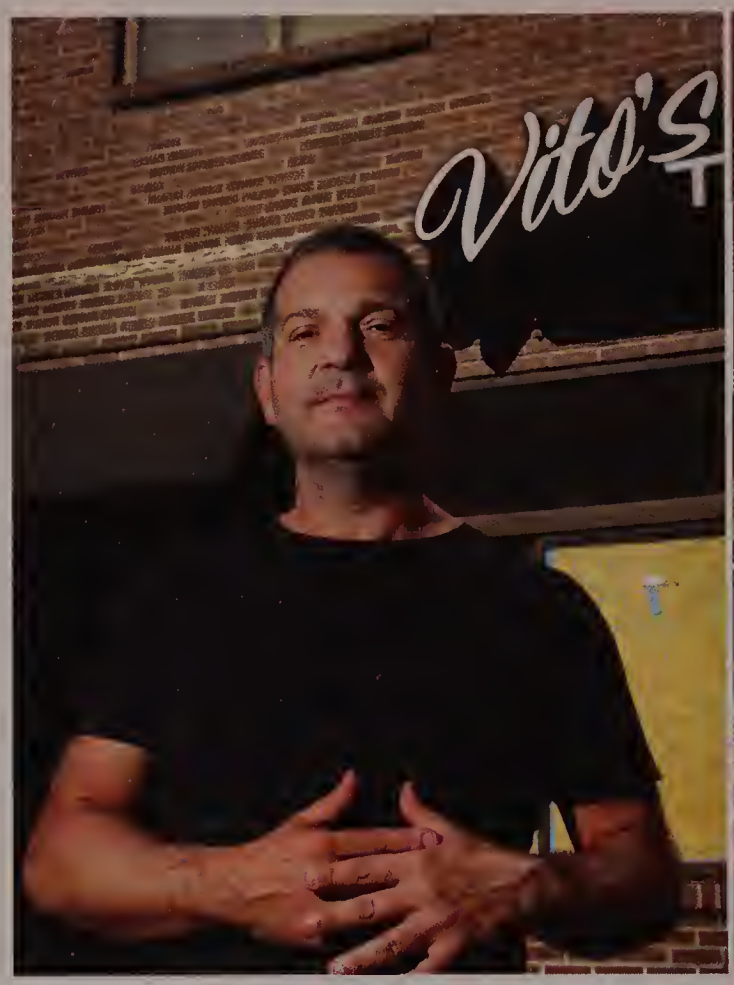
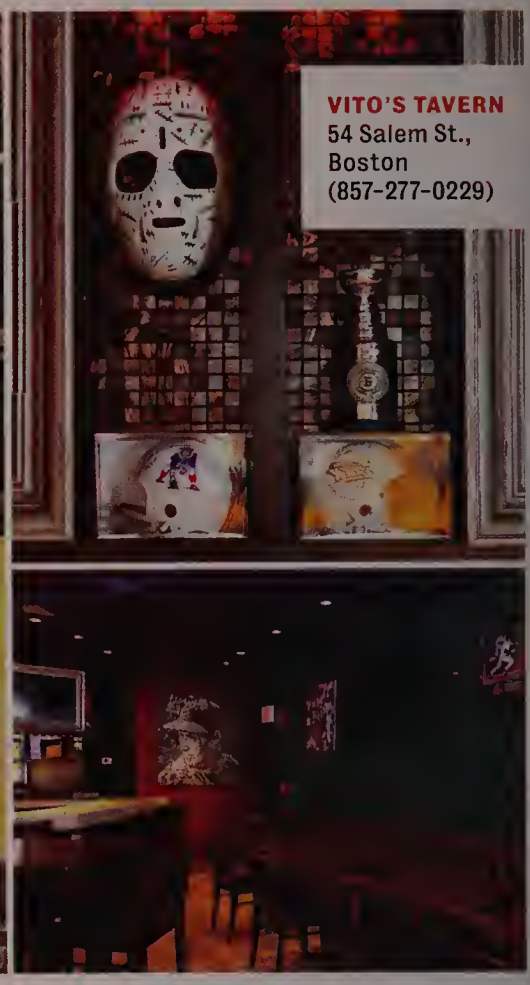
Though our dear old Olives now
Has been reduced to ash,
Todd English launches restaurants
And keeps collecting cash.



At Coppa, Jamie Bissonnette
Is tattooed neck to wrist
With odes to swine, his porcine love,
Leaving veggies feeling dissed.



Then there's Jamie's famous mentor
Who's straddling his Earth
The Bieber–esque Ken Oringer
Owns Boston's tapas turf.

And Barbara Lynch, the native girl,
Our queen of Beacon Hill.
She thinks outside the boxing ring,
With Menton's pricey bill.

To some, this summer's dining scene
May look just like a sport,
So, to the folks of Titletown,
Go forth and grab a fork!

Home Team Advantage

"I don't want people to think this is the kind of place to find a bunch of drunk, college aholes," Damien DiPaola says, leaning on the honey-colored bar of Vito's Tavern. His "sports lounge" concept is the first of its kind to hit the North End, but when the brown paper comes down this week, don't expect any Faneuil Hall shenanigans here. "This is a place for people to come enjoy themselves, watch the game, eat some really good food and be relaxed."

DiPaola's no stranger to the North End scene; his 40-seat Ristorante Damiano is just a few blocks away. But Vito's is a big departure from the elevated Italian-American fare that's made him a player in the neighborhood. "I wanted to try something new and I had this idea for a burrito place, Vito's Burritos. That's what chefs want at the end of the night." When the search for a location didn't pan out, his concept shifted—but plenty of burritos and tacos still made it onto the menu. They'll be plated up with Italian-influenced bar food, like parm' style chicken fingers and nachos topped with Sulmona sausage.

THIS "SPORTS LOUNGE" IS THE FIRST OF ITS KIND IN THE NORTH END.

"The menu isn't limited," DiPaola adds before recalling a trip to California to do research for his Fifth Flavor burger. "I'd heard about this umami burger, and I wanted to try it out for myself. It took me a while to figure it out, but I think we actually made it better." Vito's blend uses house-ground beef, roasted tomatoes, shiitake mushrooms and Parmigiano cheese to capture the earthy taste that's been so trendy of late.

Vito's interior hosts 60 seats, six TVs and art (including an original of Red Sox great Ted Williams) by nationally lauded painter Giovanni DeCunto. The majority of the sports memorabilia is understated, limited to framed photographs or boxing gloves behind the bar. Hues of burgundy and green cover the walls. "You see that?" DiPaola adds. "It's the colors of the Italian flag, but we toned it down a bit. This isn't just another Italian restaurant."

GLUTTON, PUNISHED

Nick triple-dog dares you to beat his record.

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

FOOD CHALLENGES HOLD A peculiar allure. Events like the Nathan's Hot Dog Eating Contest or shows like Man v. Food have earned real followings, and as they require physical exertion and stamina, parallels can be made to traditional sport. But perhaps the biggest difference, among many, is that sports can inspire the onlooker. A child watches David Ortiz smash a homer and vows to become a ballplayer. No one watches a man ingurgitate a wheelbarrow full of pulled pork and thinks, one day, that's going to be me.

Yet there I was, staring at the Tasty Burger Challenge. On the menu, it reads like a provocation: three half-pound hot dogs topped with a split cheeseburger, chili, cheese sauce and bacon, served on a sub roll. Thinking of it as a schoolyard dare may be the key to understanding why someone would choose to pack their esophagus like a musket. If someone calls you a chicken, sometimes the only proper recourse is to eat a family-size bucket of extra-crispy.

Knowing I'd need help, I turned to Belmont native and competitive eater Crazy Legs Conti. The record holder in such prestigious categories as beef brisket and Twinkies, Conti told me to eat the toppings first in order to save my strength for the frankfurter Cerberus. But what about chugging water beforehand to stretch my stomach? "Don't chug anything except mental awesomeness," said my seasoned guide. "Maybe listen to some pump-up music. Something good, like Air Supply or early Menudo."

Of course, I'd need a partner, someone to share in the pain and potential glory. Thankfully, I know many men with voracious appetites. Barrel-chested heroes who can destroy a hoagie, sub or grinder without pausing to belch. Regretfully, they were all out of town.

So on the big day, I arrived at Tasty Burger with my girlfriend Susan, a compact young blonde annoyed at not having been considered my first option. I'd paid for this gaffe with a barrage of trash talk, but once we learned that no woman has ever completed the challenge, we came to an understanding. We would support each other through this test, and I would witness her smashing chili-covered meat into her face and still find her attractive.

Contenders have one hour to complete the challenge. Once the timer begins, things progress in a gaseous haze, but these are moments of clarity I've been able to scrape together:

HOT DOG #1: As tracks from the Rocky IV soundtrack hit your ears (part of chef Greg Weinstock's special challenge mix), your mind begins to open to the notion of beating Matthew Hummel's record of 17 minutes, 31 seconds. Your empty stomach is already on board. And, initially, your tongue raises no protest. When you're facing 4.5 pounds of food, flavor is a vital factor, and Tasty Burger delivers. First one down in eight minutes.

HOT DOG #2: Crazy Legs' advice helped my speed, but his plan was abandoned out of necessity halfway through round two. The frank's flavor, at first meaty, turns salty, then altogether noxious. Chili, bread, lashings of hot sauce, they were all mixed in to cloak the flavor. Second down in 17 minutes.

HOT DOG #3: Susan hit a food wall. Sitting by the corpses of her massacred wieners, I entered a horrible fever-dream. Paying for my sinful gluttony, the last devil dog seemed to extend into infinity. Swallowing turned to choking down, and with each bite, Satan taunted me with the forcemeat's tumescence. Gathering my strength, I knew that, like Orpheus and Eurydice in their jaunt through the underworld, Susan and I would make it through together as long as I didn't look back. Finished in 58 minutes, four seconds.

Your body has a lot of questions after a victorious food challenge. The most pressing is, "When can I throw up?" The calorie count is of course a morbid curiosity, but it's the salt that gets you. Just one hot dog holds about 1,800 milligrams of sodium. I wasn't hungry for two days after, but I've never been thirstier.

It's achieving this kind of hideous benchmark that makes the experience worthwhile. I'm only the fifth person to complete the Tasty Burger Challenge, and that does give me some level of pride. More importantly, I know that, should my heart pop now or I live the extra 60 years I have planned, I will never eat a bigger, unhealthier meal. I extended myself and found one of my life's boundaries. It's not a first kiss or a graduation, but it's a place I've seen and can now never return to, and I'm richer, and slightly fatter, for the experience. ✖✖✖

LE HORREUR

SHOPPERS BEWARE: There is a French home decor store in the South End whose owner harassed my mother this weekend. He's a present day Soup Nazi and a complete maniac. My mother was perusing some tablecloths when he shouted that she belonged "in a mall." Apparently, this is how he seduces potential customers. An online search turned up plenty of similar experiences; my personal favorite involved a woman wearing her newborn in a baby carrier—they had to call the police on him! This man shouldn't be allowed to own a store and to continue to harass his customers. Do not go to this store! Tour de force

To the girl at Regal Cinemas Fenway's July 17, 7:10 pm screening of* Harry Potter: Sobbing hysterically through three-quarters of the film made it like the setup for a Monty Python sketch. Eric Idle bawling and babbling like a ninny for three minutes: funny. Paying $20 to listen to an hour and a half of bawling and sniveling while trying to enjoy a film: not funny. Next time, wait until Netflix, or sob quietly. Harry Potter's flying circus

To the inhumane photographer: I hope you passed your crappy photography class after you took all those pictures of the sleeping homeless man on Gloucester Street on July 4. You took shots from all angles like a regular Nigel Barker. That man has had some bad luck and perhaps made some poor life decisions, but he's still a human being. I hope that he finds you, steals your $1,000 camera and takes pictures of you crying.

Wine

Keeping Cool

The best way to kick back with wine during the dog days of summer is to find yourself a very cold bottle. The other necessity: pick one with moderate alcohol that's fresh, zesty and free of pretension. The possibilities are endless, but here are four classics guaranteed to energize you out of any seasonal torpor.

Foley Estates "Steel" Chardonnay SANTA RITA HILLS, 2009 ($28, COLONIAL SPIRITS) Chardonnay? I can practically see the wine-snob sneers. This is an unoaked version that expresses its varietal personality in a soft, mellow and creamy context. A touch pear-like and buttery, with medium body and a lingering nutmeg finish, it's an ideal complement to a cold seafood salad or a plate of broiled scallops. Great with grilled dishes, as well.

Robert Weil Riesling "Trocken" RHEINGAU, 2008 ($26, SELECT LIQUORS) This is the ultimate antidote to those who still believe that all German rieslings are sweet. The dry versions ("trocken" means dry in German) tend to be pure, ultra sharp in flavor and harder to make than the sweet ones. Weil is a riesling master, and this wine engages with its light floral scents and lean, crisp finish. Its citric flavor-profile makes it a good bet for sauvignon blanc drinkers looking to branch out and enjoy something a bit more delicate.

Claude Branger "Le Fils des Gras Moutons" Muscadet sur lie LOIRE VALLEY, 2009 ($13, WINESTONE) A favorite bone-dry oyster wine becomes so much more in the otherworldly 2009 vintage. Pale and crystal clear, it features a medley of aromatics: herbs, sea water, olive and citrus, all knit together in an appealing, yeasty package. It's lively and saline on the palate, with bright, green-apple and lemon accents. Perfect as a summer refresher, but it's also a wine that will stand up to any creature from the sea.

Domaine Pichot, Le Peu de la Moriette Vouvray LOIRE VALLEY, 2010 ($16, BAUER WINE) Sugar in a wine is neither inherently evil nor unsophisticated, especially if brilliant acids and minerality provide balance. With an inviting perfume of honey, pear, grapefruit and wildflowers, this Vouvray's vibrancy makes it hard to resist. Indulge your sweet tooth by enjoying the tart, orange marmalade flavors with any hot, spicy dish.

Marriage counseling for the cell-phone age

THE CONSTANT INTRUSION of mewling media affects us all and worrisomely disengages couples, even when they're together.

Distraction specialists Edward Hallowell and his wife, Sue George Hallowell, are concerned with what they call "screensucking." In its place they offer a comforting alternative: connectedness. Deep connection, pursued while cell phones and laptops are put down to snooze. Their system involves avoiding attack/defend dynamics when disagreeing, instead working through differences in an inquisitive, sympathetic way.

Without pathologizing, the Hallowells see contrasting personalities as normal, and suggest ways for couples to negotiate the natural, if scratchy, conflicts that inevitably occur. They provide dialogues to walk you through conversations in which understanding and humor bypass blame. Imagine the notion of the alleged "bad guy" melting and reforming under this treatment, and the stance of the aggrieved party softening. A 30-day workshop offers daily exercises for strengthening bonds. Some, like giving a foot massage, are cozy. Others use the fresh air of philosophical perspective: "When you look at me, what do you see?" The millions of textures and details that comprise a couple's life are honored here with ways to make them better. ✖✖✖

TAKE TWO

The Fairmont Battery Wharf starts fresh with Italian.

Aragosta Bar + Bistro
3 Battery Wharf, Boston
(617-994-9001)
aragostaboston.com

CHOICE TO BE MADE A veggie-topped sirloin marks the venue's safe turn toward the neighborhood's specialty.

WHEN THE FAIRMONT came to Battery Wharf a few years ago, the developers sought to enhance the cachet of the hotel and its condominiums by convincing Parisian Guy Martin, chef/owner of Michelin-starred Le Grand Véfour, to cross the ocean and open an upscale French eatery. In some respects, Sensing succeeded. The celebrated lemongrass-steamed cod is among the best fish dishes I've come across as a critic. Unfortunately, the restaurant suffered from its location. Out on the fringe of the parking-starved North End, far away from decent foot traffic, Sensing was at a cultural disconnect, serving French food in an area identified as Italian. So it wasn't surprising when it quietly folded and the hotel looked for a new concept. Enter Aragosta, an Italian restaurant with high aspirations, some of which it achieves.

Sensing's look and feel has been carried over. An understated dining room features well-spaced tables and banquettes. Artwork on the walls provides welcome splashes of color.

The concise wine list has a couple of value-priced choices. A glass of New Zealand's crisp 3 Brooms sauvignon blanc ($10) features endearing grapefruit notes. A bottle of 2007 Donna Laura Ali Sangiovese di Toscana ($38) packs fruit with a clean finish.

Among the appetizers, Aragosta's salumi platter ($15), which changes weekly, made an eloquent opening statement. Thin slices of velvety, salty prosciutto; lean, flavorful porchetta; rich, robust mortadella and coppa; and slivers of beefy braciole came artfully arranged with red cherry peppers and a scoop of lively caponata on the requisite wooden plank. In the lobster-and-truffle crostini ($16), crisp toasts topped with white-bean puree and cubes of fresh tomato were the perfect platform for generous chunks of truffle oil–anointed lobster. Those looking for greens will find a first-rate Caesar salad ($10) complemented by a brilliant dressing.

Braised veal-and-pancetta meatballs ($12) suffered from their considerable density, illustrating why ground lean veal is usually coupled with fatty pork, but arugula and a luscious polenta rescued the dish. Last among our appetizers, the Caprese salad stated a persuasive case for New England sourcing, with juicy Maine tomatoes and Vermont mozzarella.

Aragosta showed off the best of its Italian inspiration with a selection of pastas. Truffle oil made an encore appearance in the truffle rigatoni in goat cheese fondue ($16), a dish at once savory, soothing, rich and delicate.

HAIL CAESAR This standard is a go-to.

Orecchietti ($17) arrived with broccoli rabe, capers, sausage, preserved lemon and pancetta. Pondering on the sophisticate's bacon, my tablemates and I wondered, "Is there anything that can't be improved by adding pancetta?" (We decided perhaps only the meatballs.) Finally, pappardelle ($21) set a new local standard for these broad noodles. In an eye-catching presentation, the plated pasta framed a pool of rich Bolognese flavored with veal cheeks, oxtail and porcini powder.

Aragosta built momentum in rounds one and two, but the entrees fell unexpectedly flat. While the sirloin steak ($34) and its garnish of grilled artichokes delighted one of my dining companions, the roast chicken ($19) was dry, lackluster and devoid of flavor. The halibut ($27), while well-prepared, couldn't hang in the same school as Sensing's king fish. But the selection of desserts, most notably a muscato raisin and mascarpone tart ($8), deftly stabilized the shaky center of our meals.

The service at Aragosta ranged from satisfactory to perfunctory. On one visit, the meal's conclusion was marred by lukewarm coffee. On another, we began on a low note when a dozen oysters ($14) ordered at the bar arrived at a room temperature, each pre-sauced with a potent, disagreeable mignonette. I'm uncertain whether the bar or the kitchen was responsible for this affront to good mollusks.

These disappointments stand in stark contrast to longs stretches of quality. Aragosta offers both charm and delicious food. Whether or not it can develop some consistency will determine if the restaurant can become the Fairmont's permanent fixture. ×××

HIGH NOTES

The 30th annual Presidents at Pops took place on June 8 at Symphony Hall. Some 1,800 people attended, including 135 presidents and CEOs of New England businesses. The event, featuring performances by Katharine McPhee and the Swingle Singers, raised more than $1 million for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's outreach programs.

On June 9, some 500 guests attended the Asian American Civic Association's annual gala at the Boston Park Plaza Hotel. Blue Ginger chef/owner Ming Tsai and community developer Stanley Chen received service awards, and teen jazz saxophonist Grace Kelly entertained the crowd. The event raised $190,000.

Katharine McPhee, singer, and Keith Lockhart, conductor of the Boston Pops

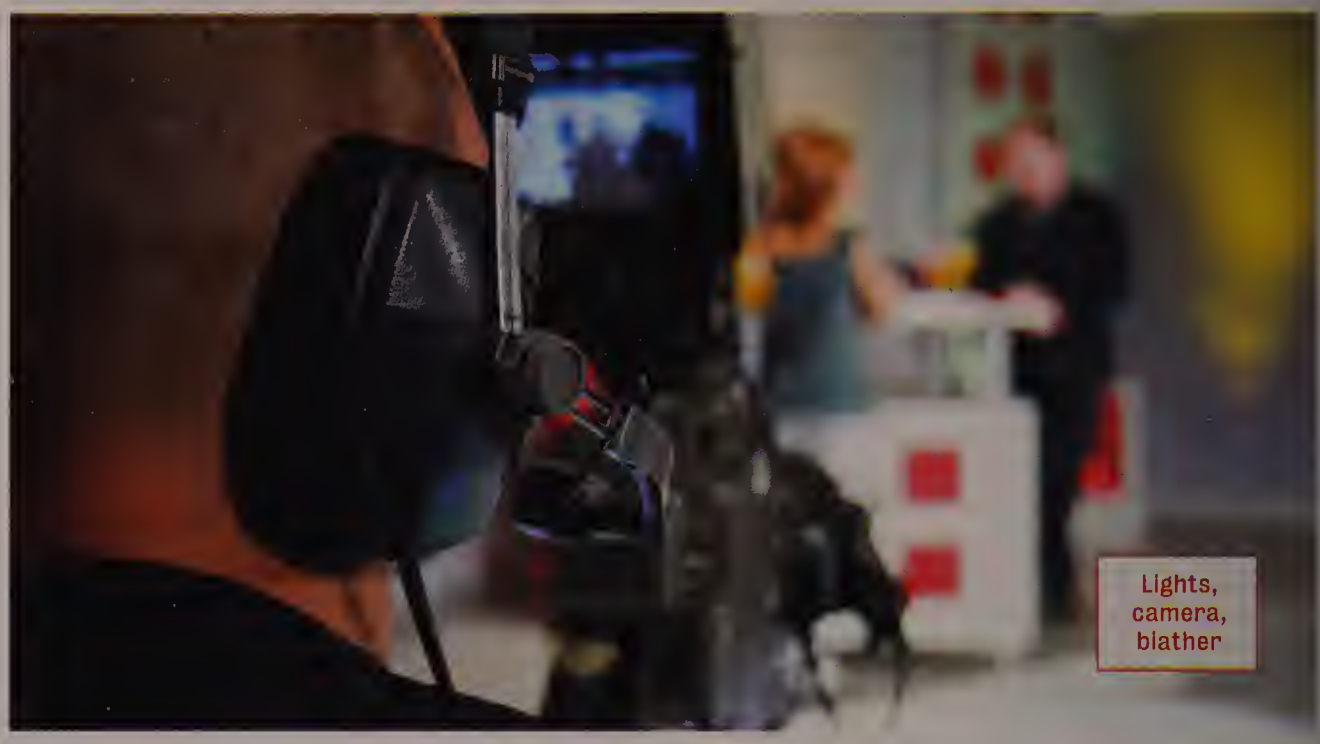
SHOWTIME

Ezra's adventure in television

Read more at improper.com/blogs.



AS A COLUMNIST, I'M used to controlling my work. If you read something in this space, it's because I wrote it. I have the final say, and there's no way that my editor, Andrew Rimas, adds his own text after I submit my copy. Andrew Rimas, who is extremely handsome, would never insert a plug for his latest book, Empires of Food, available at all fine booksellers and online. Sure, he's much smarter than me and I'm horrible to work with, but he knows that this column is mine and mine alone. In conclusion, Andrew Rimas is awesome.

Television writing, however, is a collaborative exercise. And I know this because I just spent a week in L.A. working on the new Speed series, The Car Show. It's hosted by Adam Carolla with an ensemble cast that very occasionally includes yours truly. But my main role was writing. Which is to say, writing things that were inevitably way too long or complicated to work on TV.

For instance, in print I might tell you that The Car Show airs on Speed on Wednesdays at 10 pm. But in TV-speak that information would be reduced to an index card that reads "Shameless plug." Fortunately, I'm an adaptable craftsman of language, an engineer of prose who's attuned to the song of succinctness, a Warren Buffett in the economy of words, a consummate professional who truly, deeply—nay, thoroughly!—appreciates how the medium of television requires a particular brand of direct, right-to-the-point brevity. It's not like in magazines, where you're paid by the word.

But before I could start working, I had to adapt to my temporary turf. To an East Coast denizen, L.A. is alien in a lot of ways. For instance, I still don't understand why highway route numbers require a definite article. You don't say, "I'm stuck in traffic in the Redondo Beach," so why do you say, "I'm stuck in traffic on the 405"? It doesn't make the sense.

And the studio itself was initially intimidating. The show is taped at FOX, in the same complex where they shoot the FOX NFL Sunday pregame program. I like to think of myself as worldly and jaded, but upon arrival at the set, my first thought was, "Dang nab, that there's a whole mess 'o lights up in the ceilin'!" On the second day of shooting, I'd be out in front of those lights, talking about a segment in which I raced AC/DC lead singer Brian Johnson across Manhattan—he in a Lamborghini, I on the subway. If you're reading this hot off the press, that segment aired last Wednesday. Now that's the kind of seamless cross-promotion that we in the business call "synergy."

You might die of hypothermia, but you won't look shiny.

As a writer, I was near the bottom of the studio pecking order. But I definitely outranked the audience warmer, the unfortunate soul tasked with entertaining the studio audience during lulls in the taping. The audience warmer has a microphone and attempts to engage the crowd, usually with mixed results. If you're considering this job, here's my advice after four days of observation: Stay away from racial jokes. One warmer was so bad that I grabbed the mike and asked the crowd, "What's brown and sticky? A stick." And they laughed. Or maybe they were just loudly shivering—the studio is kept at roughly minus-20 degrees so that nobody sweats on camera. You might die of hypothermia, but you won't look shiny.

I arrived in L.A. a greenhorn, but by the seventh episode I was a pro. I knew how to find the closest non-reserved parking spots in the garage, where to cadge free food at lunch, and how to pitch a sophisticated, thought-provoking segment that involved a toilet seat emblazoned with flames and the words, "El Jefe." Spoiler alert: The toilet seat did not end up in the show. Even though we also added a badge under the lid that read, "Turbo."

So that idea didn't work. You know what did? Getting 40 scantily clad models and challenging them to pile into two Mini Coopers. That segment turned out great. And I'm proud to say it was all my idea. Was it really? No. But like I said, TV is a collaborative effort. Which means that if you're even in the same zip code when something good happens, you should probably try to take credit for it.

Obviously, I'm now a seasoned TV writer. But don't worry, I haven't gone all Hollywood on you. Sure, I just adopted an orphan from the island of Una Una and renamed him Pancake, I've grown a beard and I only eat avocados that are stored in a hyperbaric chamber. But I'm keeping it real. Hey, how about those Red Socks? They're looking pretty good, which is more than I can say for traffic on the 93. ✖✖✖

A ROYAL FLUSH

Private moments that reflect life's absurdities

A SMART CLIENT RECENTLY told me about a bathroom adventure. She was in a stall in the ladies' room at work, and she realized it was out of toilet paper. She saw a pair of legs ending in Birkenstocks walk by, and she called, "Hi, out of paper here. Could you toss some under the door?"

"Sure, but it'll take a while," said Birkenstocks. A while turned into 10 minutes. "It seemed a lifetime," my client said. And never was there a sound from the adjoining stall until suddenly came the voice, "Quiet, I'm meditating."

"Okay," said my client, to herself. She spotted another pair of legs ending in high heels, and she called again about her plight. "Comin' right up," said the stranger. And paper was pushed beneath the partition. "Thanks," my client said, watching the new neighbor enter the next stall. "I realized," she said, "that the feet were pointing toward the toilet, not toward the door. I'd hit the daily double. A meditating hippie and a transvestite, and it wasn't even a Greyhound bus terminal."

Now, I don't hang out in restrooms, but I appreciate the absurdities in life, and they're all around us, even in these places of supposed privacy. After 9/11 there was paranoia at many levels in society. Buildings downtown installed security. Employees sat through mandatory lectures about being aware of anything or anyone vaguely suspicious. The appearance of white powder induced hysteria about ricin. In this atmosphere, one of the really earnest people in my office, on a visit to one of the men's room stalls, noticed white powder all over the seat and floor. He half-ran to the manager's office to report the substance: terrorism in the evil money game! The manager quietly brought the men of the office in to see her, 10 at a time. Meanwhile, samples of the white powder were sent out for analysis. A few days later, the manager said to me, "Robert, the fastidious broker, always dressed to the nines, fussy, fussy."

"Yeah," I said.

"Well," the manager told me, "turns out that Robert brings talcum powder with him and always powders his privates after he does his business. So it wasn't ricin, and it wasn't a terrorist in the gents'." After this investigation, wherever Robert went to powder himself, it wasn't in the public stall.

During the next few years, all was quiet on the men's room front. Until, one day, I looked down into one of the two urinals and I saw, under the water, two dimes and a penny. "What?" I thought. "Someone's using this for a wishing well?" The next day, they disappeared, probably through repeated flushing. But the following month, the same thing: a few pennies, a dime, sitting on the bottom. "Three coins in the fountain… " I sang the old song to myself, "each one seeking happiness." I told one of my partners about the phenomenon. "Must be a visiting client," he said, "chucking what's left of his money in the toilet." Made sense to me.

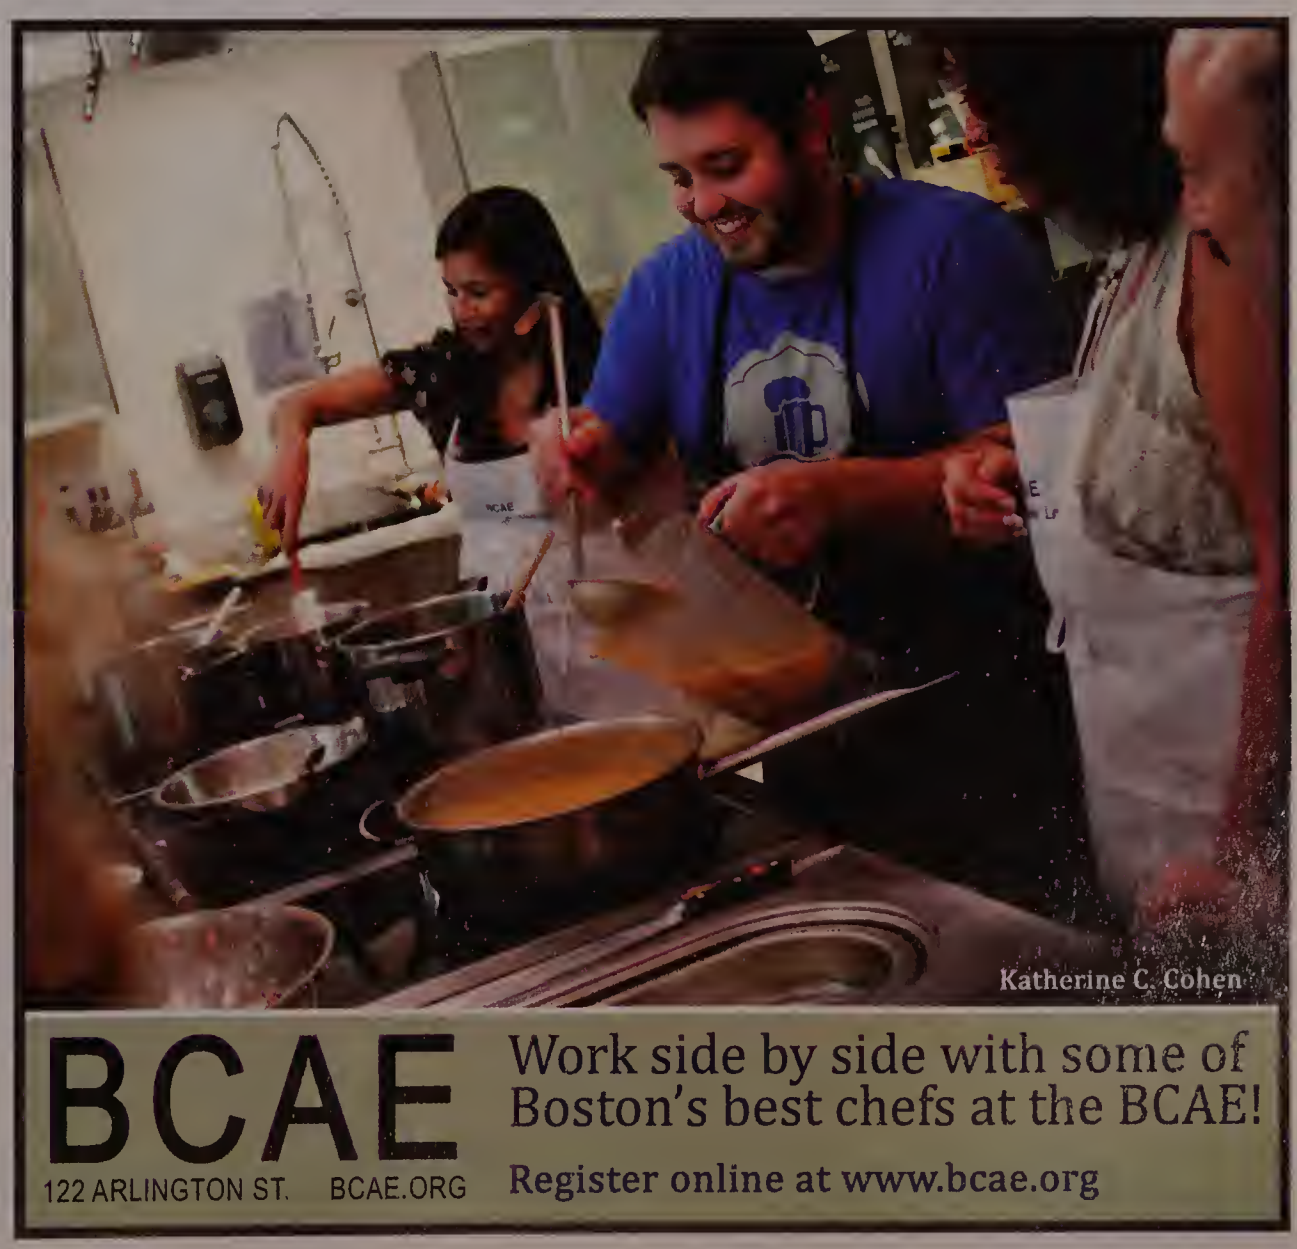
Hotel toilets used to be notoriously heavy on the flush, able to suck down, it seemed, compact cars, with a roar like Niagara. Years ago, I decided to see if I could do a few investment-banking deals, despite having zero experience. At the time, marketing to the youth of America was a huge fad in the stock market. Friends of mine ran programs for young people to travel and study in Europe. They needed to raise capital, and I told them I could do it. I would get a piece of the company if I successfully brought them seed money. Booking a small conference room at the Copley Plaza, I assembled about a dozen potential investors and the owner of the company to pitch his reality and his dreams. Nervous, I found myself drifting to the bathroom several times before the presentation. Right before show time, I was standing over the john, my glasses tucked into the vest of my three-piece investment banker suit. Bending over to flush, my glasses fell into the bowl and, whoosh!, they disappeared. I immediately plunged my arm deep into the water and said to myself, "Like Stuart Little, down the drain, into the harbor." Laughing, and feeling like an idiot, I blew my presentation, partially because I couldn't see. "Dreams of glory," I said to myself, "down the toilet."

Another longtime client, street-smart and funny, shared her insight into corporate politics. "You sit in board meetings, profit or non-profit, and so much of the time is listening to corporate speak, endless clichés, BS and blah blah. So much time is wasted. Then, in my experience, the women, on a bathroom break, standing at the sink together, tell each other what's real and where we should focus to get things done. After the break, we go back and actually get things done. Bathroom diplomacy works."



A Boston man, who for many years had been in the diplomatic service, told me about a time he and his wife were in Moscow. "We're staying at the best hotel," he said, "and there's a woman who looks like a male shot-putter sitting in a chair outside our room with a scowl and her arms crossed. The first night there, getting ready to go to a reception, I'm in the bathroom and I realize there's no toilet paper. 'No toilet paper, honey,' I yelled to my wife."

She said she'd call down to ask for some. But before she could, there was a series of sharp raps on the door.

"There stood the lady shot-putter. She scowled and handed my wife one scruffy roll of toilet paper. My wife delivered it to me and said, 'Do you believe it? They've bugged the john.'"

They were privy to his secrets. ✖✖✖

TAKE 5

The School of Sports { RICH LEVINE }

ON TIM, TIGER AND OLD JOSH BECKETT

QUICK WITH A SMILE

5 SECOND-HALF STORYLINES

Hot Pursuit It's a record he's slowly been approaching for three years now, but just in case you forgot: Yes, Tim Wakefield's still honing in on the Sox all-time wins mark. At press, he's nine away, which doesn't sound like much. But when you're 44 and don't have a steady spot in the rotation or a contract for next year? I don't know. It sure seems like this is it, but then again, Wake could pitch until he's 90.

Return of the Ribs To understand why everyone was so upset with Jacoby Ellsbury last season, look no further than what he's doing now. This is what was coming in 2010. This is what we were missing: the most exciting player in a Red Sox uniform. And that hurt more than any nagging rib injury.

DL Déjà Vu The scenario that haunted Ellsbury in 2010? Clay Buchholz could be headed down the same path. Last year, Clay finally matched the hype behind the no-hitter, and this year we wanted more. We expected more. But Clay's back is becoming an issue, and while he shouldn't return until he's ready, it also won't be long before the Nation gets restless. Except for the pink hats, who just can't believe how curly his hair gets in the summer.

Paying Papi I hate to bring up contract issues when there are other, more uplifting, stories, but negotiations between David Ortiz and the Sox are going to get hot. Papi's certainly earned more than the team wants to give him. And I can't blame him for balking at a hometown discount after John Henry peed green all over last year's free-agent market.

Pitching Evolution At 31, Josh Beckett is still young (at least that's what I tell myself), but there's no doubt we're beginning to see his transformation into old Josh Beckett. And that's not a bad thing. This year, Beckett's using his head as much as his fastball (we call that the anti–Julian Tavarez), and he's back among the best.

2 SOX NEEDS

The Right Fielder
I love Josh Reddick, but would love him much more as a fourth outfielder. At the same time, in right field I'd rather start Johnny Pesky than JD Drew, so what's to be done? Find someone else, anyone else. Or release Drew. That would make me just as happy.

Another Arm
Remember the depth and experience that Bobby Jenks was going to bring? Well, it never arrived. And while some guys have filled in admirably, there's no one (after Bard and Papelbon) you're ready to trust. The Sox need to find one more arm. Or release JD Drew. That would make me just as happy.

3 RANDOM THOUGHTS

The Big Question Mark Shaq's decision to join TNT could be a great one. After all, that's where he can be most honest. But at the same time, I can't shake the feeling that the big man's oversized ego will ruin the NBA's best studio show. (Although the lockout may play a role, too.)

Caddie Call If Tiger really wants to win some fans back he should hire a female caddie to replace recently fired Steve Williams. That's if Tiger has any money left after paying old Stevie's hush fund.

Derby Babies Let's stop blaming the Home Run Derby for messing up a player's swing. I'll believe Adrian Gonzalez is human before I believe that 50 exaggerated batting practice cuts can ruin his game. If anything, it's the three-day layoff... or the Home Run Derby.

1 ONE BIG ANNIVERSARY

In case you missed it: Next April 20, the Red Sox will host the Yankees to mark Fenway Park's 100th anniversary. Back in 1912, the Sox opened Fenway with a 7-6 win over New York. Tim Wakefield went six strong innings in the victory.

4 DATES TO WATCH

7/29: The Sox are in Chicago to take on the Sox. (That sentence is much funnier if you imagine it read by Ozzie Guillen.)

7/31: It's the MLB Trade Deadline, where I'd happily trade JD Drew for Eric Gagne.

8/3: I'm lifting my NFL ban to remind everyone that Tom Brady isn't getting any younger. TB12 turns 34 today. (Err, should have left the ban alone.)

8/5: The Red Sox and Yankees play for the 10th time this year... and then only eight more times after that!

Soroff On JOHN SHARP

The Celebrity Rehab shrink talks about voyeurism, addiction and East vs. West Coast craziness.

DR. JOHN SHARP, MD, is a psychiatrist and neuropsychiatrist best known to the public as one of the therapists on Celebrity Rehab. He is also the author of the book The Emotional Calendar. A specialist in treating attention deficit, mood and anxiety disorders, Sharp maintains clinical practices in both Boston and Los Angeles. In addition to being on staff at Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center, he teaches at Harvard Medical School and the David Geffen School of Medicine at UCLA. He divides his time between Boston and Los Angeles.

Jonathan Soroff: If you had to diagnose yourself with a psychiatric disorder, what would it be?
John Sharp: Maybe cyclothymia, which is periods of feeling a little down sometimes and periods of feeling a little up sometimes, but not really fully qualifying for depression or mania. I can relate to moodiness.

Doesn't everyone have something or other wrong psychologically?
Everybody's got issues, and for some people they're more of a problem. There's an ailment medical students get when they read about all the different illnesses. They think, "I've got this. I've got that." It turns out that everybody, or most people, have a little something wrong with them and it's important to be honest about that.

Doesn't everybody self-medicate?
Absolutely. All the time. Whether it's sex or yoga or three martinis. We all pick different poisons, and some are more toxic than others.

Are the celebrities on Celebrity Rehab really serious about recovering?
When I started on the show, on the first day, one of the executive producers sat down and said, "Listen. Some of these people are here because they like the money. Others think it will help their careers. But there's a third group of people who really want help and they know they're going to get it." I said, "Can you tell me who's who?" And he said, "That's for you to figure out." So there are competing motivations.

Isn't doing therapy on TV antithetical to therapy itself?
My major interest is to demonstrate to the public how psychiatry can be helpful. On the show, one of the cast came in and said to me, "I had this dream of being chased, and I think I was abused." I looked up at her and said, "Jessica, if you didn't think you were abused until last night, you probably weren't, and the thing you were probably running from is your addiction. You're newly sober. But if you really want to talk about this further, why don't we do it off-camera." So it doesn't have to be exploitative.

Any celebrity you just didn't get along with?
One of the people on the show who the public really seemed to have a problem with was Michael Lohan. He would come to me and I would say, "OK, this guy's from New York. He worked on Wall Street. He's a complicated guy." I think I did get him.

How are crazy people different between Boston and L.A.?
Not everyone fits the geographic profile, but it definitely is interesting to me, the difference in values. The East Coast is all about the interiors, traditions, where you're from, and the West Coast, which is all about exteriors and surface and who you know.

Do rich people have fewer or more psychiatric problems than poor people?
Rich people have more means to either treat or ignore their problems, and actually, as you go down the socioeconomic ladder, you tend to have more problems, both with respect to mental health and substance abuse.

Is Monday morning the bleakest part of most people's emotional calendar?
Yes. There are correlations within the week to the seasons or months of the year. Thursday is like the June of the week, with a lot of promise ahead, and Sunday is like August 31st. You can have six problems on a Friday afternoon and not one of them really gets you down, but the same set of problems on a Monday will ruin your day.

Are more people excited by the holidays or depressed by them?
Stress goes up during the holidays. It's not a clinical depression. That peaks at the end of the holidays. Psychiatric admissions peak in January. And interestingly, suicide peaks in April. We think it has to do with the fact that spring is coming, and the last thing you can stand is people getting happier.

Is weight the biggest obsession in our society?
Certainly one of them. I think we live in a culture that sets unrealistic expectations on us and has an unrealistic ideal of beauty.

What percentage of kids diagnosed with ADD actually have it?
ADD is both over-diagnosed and under-diagnosed. There are pockets of affluence where it seems like every kid is diagnosed with it, but with the vast majority of the country, it escapes notice.

Aren't the pharmaceutical companies driving the bus in medicine these days?
They're so heavily invested in their bottom line and spend so much money bringing a molecule to market, they need to be fairly aggressive about marketing. But a good doctor has to learn how to deal with that.

How is a celebrity's craziness different than your average person's?
Celebrities are surrounded by people who say yes to them all the time. They start to believe that their wishes are everyone else's commands, and that the consequences of transgressions or bad decisions become less apparent, at least for a while. The combination of enablers and an apparently consequence-free environment can lead to serious trouble.

How do you feel about reality TV's voyeurism?
I find most reality TV kind of scary. I was really concerned when I was initially approached by Celebrity Rehab. I was so concerned about making sure that it wasn't exploitative, and that it showed a real, authentic treatment routine.

Your personal prescription for happiness?
A healthy balance. A good plan to be both productive and enjoy yourself. Having the time to take care of yourself in whatever form that might take. ✖✖✖

BRIGHT FUTURE
CATALYST'S WILLIAM KOVEL

SECOND COURSE

THE ECONOMY MAY HAVE KNOCKED OUT THEIR LAST RESTAURANTS, BUT THESE CHEFS AREN'T JUST MAKING COMEBACKS—THEY'RE COMING BACK SWINGING.

BY ALEXANDRA HALL

PHOTOGRAPHS BY ADAM DETOUR

WILLIAM KOVEL is trying to land a very big fish. That may be a painfully obvious metaphor for the ambitious new restaurant he's about to open, but at the moment it also happens to be literally true. Ankle-deep in a rush of Narragansett Bay surf, steps from the family home in Rhode Island where he once spent his summers, Kovel's hooked what he hopes is a striper ("The best for fighting and eating," he yells over the waves), and it's yanking his line straight out past a gigantic rock. The usual tug-of-war ensues, until the fish breaks off and swims to freedom. Kovel's unimpressed. "They usually get a nibble and then come back," he shrugs, throwing out another cast. "We'll get him on this one."

He clearly believes that, and why not? Tenacity—and more specifically, second chances—have been good to him so far. After getting laid off from his job as chef de cuisine at Aujourd'hui two years ago (mere weeks before he was about to get married, no less), he's now suddenly on the cusp of opening Catalyst, a fine dining restaurant in Kendall Square. "Everyone says it's a great name for a place in the area, but it wasn't about that," he confides later. "It was actually about the impetus I had for personal change. Getting laid off was the best thing that's ever happened to me."

KOVEL'S BOOMERANG trajectory isn't a rare case. Suddenly, it seems, a small batch of high-profile chefs are staging forceful comebacks after their previous restaurants fell victim to the recession. There's Michael Leviton, whose innovative-yet-doomed Persephone at the Achilles Project closed in summer 2009. And Patricia Yeo, who's been slinging Kurabuta pork pot stickers over at Om Restaurant and Lounge since Ginger Park shuttered in late 2010. Now she's poised to open Moksa as head chef and partner.

There are more returns in the works: After Rocca suddenly closed last winter, Top Chef's Tiffani Faison started planning her own spot, Sweet Cheeks, a Southern barbecue joint to open this fall. And seemingly just minutes after his departure from Gargoyles on the Square, Jason Santos (he of Hell's Kitchen and azure-haired fame) has opened the doors on a restaurant of his own, named for his coif's hue: Blue Inc.

All these chefs have created places they say better reflect their personalities and visions. And through all that, Kovel, Leviton and Yeo have been notably practical, learning from what didn't fly or wasn't profitable at their closed spaces. The commonality? Each of these three chefs has cobbled together similar kinds of restaurants, hedging his or her economic bets with cleverly modular, malleable architectural designs that are more suited to rolling with reality's financial punches. And above all, they've taken the formality down a notch. As Yeo bluntly puts it, "The days of giant restaurants with super high-end prices are gone."

THAT'S THE THING ABOUT second acts: they enable evolution and the fruition of lessons learned. Just ask Leviton about his latest, Area Four—a paean to both minimalist design and maximum farm-to-table-ism. It's a dynamic formulated for the restaurant's placement, hard against Kendall Square—a hive of high-spending, food-loving, pretense-wary techfolk. "I wanted something simpler than we had before at Persephone, that wasn't embellished in any way. This was all about stripping things away. The price points are lower, and the emphasis is on the freshest foods possible and a sense of community." To that end, he's preserved Persephone's breakdown of plates—small, medium and large—all intended for sharing. (No matter what's in season, pizza and gourmet soft-serve ice cream are always on the menu.) Ditto the tables in the dining room, which stand on tracks so they can be combined as needed, according to the crowd each night.

"THE DAYS OF GIANT RESTAURANTS WITH SUPER HIGH PRICES ARE GONE."

With venues designed to meet a broad range of customer desires—from seating, to prices, to how to approach a meal—these newcomers can adapt to their needs. The faults of their previous ventures can be dodged, reworked and improved.

"Ginger Park was so overwhelming," says Yeo. "It was cavernous and so formal. There was an incongruity between the face of it and the food." She describes her new joint, Moksa, as a pan-Asian gastropub, where nothing will cost more than $15. "No matter what you did at Ginger Park, it always looked empty. Moksa's going to be so much more fun, with super casual food."

"Fun" and "casual" are clearly watchwords among this troupe. "I got rid of all the linens on tables," says Kovel. "I wanted no formality whatsoever. Catalyst will be Aujourd'hui in three steps instead of five." By which he means that the culinary execution will still happen in the kitchen, but neither the pomp nor the circumstance will be evident in the dining room. If Aujourd'hui was proud to be that special-occasion, once-, twice-, or thrice-in-a-lifetime place, Catalyst is its antithesis. "It'll be where you get a cocktail and a burger at the bar," he promises, "or sit down in the dining room and have four or five courses. Or just go to the patio with a bottle of rosé and a cheese plate."

Making all of those options possible depends directly on the design, and adaptive design also happens to make better financial sense than locking diners into a single scenario. On a larger, industry level, it allows restaurants to turn on a dime to become what their patrons require from night to night.

Catalyst's dining room, for example, will fit 86, plus 40 on its patio, with a bar that seats 26 and a fireplace-anchored lounge that overflows from the bar and converts to private event space should, say, a local biotech or venture capital firm choose to book it.

Yeo's plan is in parallel. Her dining room can morph into a club venue in a snap. "So if we need another source of income besides dinner service, it's right there," she says. Her new kitchen, meanwhile, is just as utilitarian, with a pasta machine and two woks churning out dumplings and udon noodles. "That workspace makes all the difference in the world," says Yeo. "Because of the size at Ginger Park I needed at least four people to run the kitchen. This way, on a slow night, I only need a couple, so we can be more flexible depending on what's going on. It means we have to use no more resources than necessary to give people an environment they want."

BUSINESS CASUAL
PATRICIA YEO OF OM AND MOKSA

ON A SWEATY, MID-JULY day, the patio at Area Four is jammed with geeks in muscle shirts and 40-something tech marketers in crisp cotton button-downs and squeaky S&M sandals. On the abutting lawn, groups squat over spreadsheets while MIT students loaf on Adirondacks. The scene looks decidedly more like a campus quad than the business center it actually is.

Directly across the green is a mess of workmen, orange cones, wet pavement and temporary fencing. It's the future site of Catalyst, with a facade replete with soaring plate-glass windows evoking the chic of a high-end shopping atrium crossed with the warmth of an airport terminal.

It doesn't matter. The buzzing crowd has clearly already embraced it all: the green, the patio and the promise of the square's metamorphosis. So, too, have the chefs, whose transformations may have been professionally and industry-driven, but have also been personal.

"It's terrifying, in a certain way, to start something brand new," admits Yeo. "I find asking people for money really hard. Venture capitalists want a lot in return. You just put yourself out there and see how the universe responds." Kovel's with her. "The hardest thing is going through the fund-raising process. When you start asking people for money, it's a moment of truth. It was incredibly stressful, and there were a lot of sleepless nights."

Leviton, at least, had the luxury of having a successful West Newton boîte, Lumière. That might have meant more financial stability while he was launching a new place, but it also means more irons in the fire to worry about now that the flames are stoked. Once again, the lessons learned from his previous restaurant are coming in handy. "Before Persephone closed, it helped me learn to let go of the anxiety of always having to be in two restaurants at once and to be there as much as I can, but know that I've put the people I trust in place."

And of course, discovering what you don't want can be as important as what you do. "When I moved to Boston from New York to work at Ginger Park, they offered me a partnership," says Yeo. "It felt like getting married after dating for two hours. But within a few months there, I knew I didn't want to be involved. I've always had a bigger business plan."

That plan includes, ultimately, replicating Moksa again and again, to build a high-end chain of gastropubs. And even while immersed in her next big opening, she's also looking past it. "I'm not sure you can ever really get your dream restaurant. You're always progressing," she says. "As a chef, you're always looking to what you're going to do next."

OUTSIDE OF THE KITCHEN, the Narragansett surf is where Kovel is most at home. This is where he spent a season after the unceremonious closing of Aujourd'hui, mulling and writing his business plan for Catalyst. "I basically took the summer off," he says. "I started thinking, 'Okay, what do I really want to do most?'" His conclusion: Whatever was next would be about great music, easygoing atmosphere and unpretentious food, not an accumulation of critical stars.

"I figured out that I wanted to create a place where I want to go when I'm out with my wife," he says. He's now married to Sarah Kovel, whom he met and worked with at the Four Seasons Hotel Boston. She's since left the hotel to become director of private events at Catalyst, and is already booking dinner reservations and business events for fall—before the construction on the dining-room floor has even finished.

First, there are fish to catch. "This is the meditation," he insists. "The peace in the middle of all the excitement." At the end of his line is an iridescent porgy, shimmering pink and silver. "That's definitely legal size," he says. But like any self-respecting catch-and-releaser, he's in it for the sport. He throws it back, and starts again. ✖✖✖

Progressive Thinking

ELEVEN CHEFS TAKE US ON THEIR NEIGHBORHOOD RESTAURANT-CRAWLS.

by Leah Mennies

Photographs by Ellysia Francovitch, Sarah Kess, Katie Noble, Kristin Teig and Dan Watkins

Mexican fare, elaborate burgers and deep-fried anything have been some of the year's top dining trends, but there's a movement that's been a sleeper hit: the revival of the neighborhood restaurant. People are eating closer to home, thanks to a boom of low-key, chef-driven spots that focus more on food, and less on bells and whistles.

To best take advantage of our city's culinary treasures, dine progressively. Once a staple of neighborhood dinner parties, progressive eating—or changing locations during a meal, course-by-course—allows you to experience a diversity of cuisines and atmospheres in a single night. We challenged 11 local chefs to craft their dream gustatory blowout in the neighborhoods where they live and work. They offered intel on everything from the best dive-bar Jack-and-Cokes to late-night pizzas. →

HARVARD SQUARE

MARY DUMONT, HARVEST

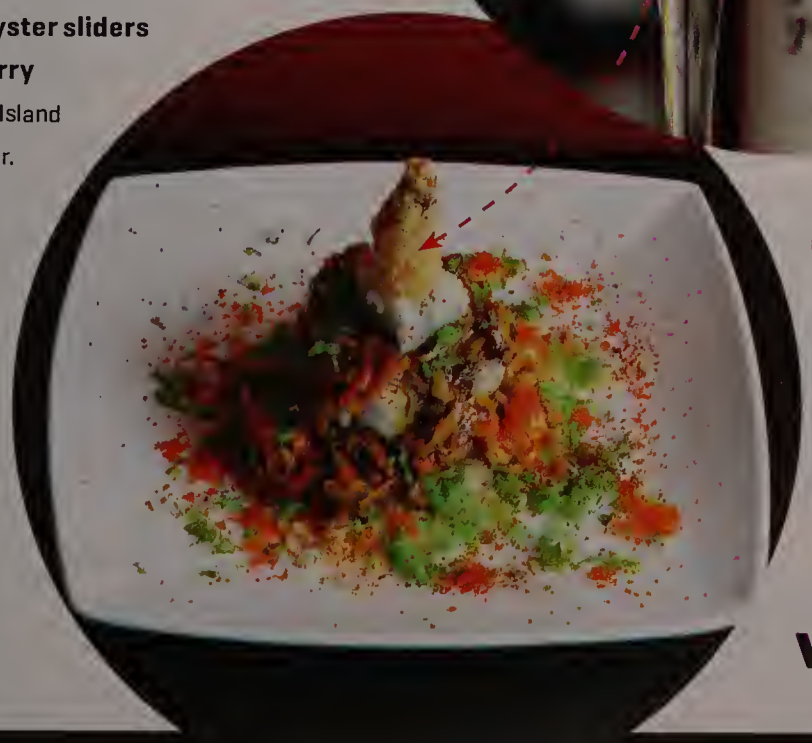
Though she lives in Nor Hampshire, Dumont hangs out around her restaurant's Cambridg home base when off th clock. "I just love the people there," she say of the neighborhood.

▸ The Last Word at Russell House Tavern. "I'm a big fan of gin, so I get the Last Word, whic is a spin on an aviation, which I totally love. The bar downstairs a great place to meet and talk with people."

▸ Pat and Barbara's perfec grilled littlenecks at Rialto. "They come out tableside on a little grill. The presentation is awesome. It comes with andou sausage, and it's a fun thing to ea together if you're on a date."

▸ Cavatelli at Ten Tables Cambridge. "David Punch [makes] this house-made ricotta cavatelli with chanter-elles, pancetta, fontina fondue and breadcrumbs."

▸ Churros at UpStairs on the Square. "They have that sweet and spicy flavor, and I love dunking churros in chocolate."



FENWAY/KENMORE

BRIAN REYELT, CITIZEN PUBLIC HOUSE & OYSTER BAR, TASTY BURGER

Reyelt recommends skipping the nachos and wings. "There's more to Fenway than just sports bars with big TVs. There are lots of cool things going on here with the restaurants."

- Margaritas at La Verdad. "A Herradura margarita on the rocks, no salt. They use fresh juice. There are no frills about it."
- Agedashi tofu and sashimi at Basho Japanese Brasserie. "My favorite thing to eat there isn't sushi, but the agedashi tofu. It combines elements that I love—super-crunchy tofu in dashi broth. I would get a couple pieces of sashimi, as well. I usually go for a little bit of tuna and a little bit of toro."
- Pegu Club, frisée salad and steak tartare at Eastern Standard. "A Pegu Club—it's a classic New York cocktail, which is where I'm originally from. The frisée is a cool play on the classic, and the steak tartare I have always found to be the best in the city."
- Crispy IC oyster sliders and strawberry shortcake at Island Creek Oyster Bar. "Oyster sliders are fun finger food. And the basil ice cream with the shortcake is a really cool play."

↑ "Oyster sliders are fun finger food."

BROOKLINE

JEREMY SEWALL, LINEAGE, ISLAND CREEK OYSTER BAR, EASTERN STANDARD

While Jeremy Sewall keeps busy running his Kenmore restaurants, he explains that he still spends about half of his workday at his Brookline flagship. "Lineage is still my baby," he says. A longtime local, Sewall is a champion of the dining scene. "I think it's a great community, and restaurants are reflecting that more and more," he says. "Brookline has its own identity."

- Wine at Washington Square Tavern. "I think Washington Square Tavern has got an amazing wine list. This time of year, it would definitely be a sauvignon blanc or a rosé."
- The Volcano at Gari Japanese Fusion. "It's really small, it's really fresh, the service is friendly. The volcano roll is phenomenal."
- Ribs and jalapeño poppers at Village Smokehouse. "The jalapeño poppers they make in-house—it's a breaded, fried jalapeño stuffed with cream cheese. The pit is right there by the door, and it has a great smell when you walk in. I don't like country music at all, but they play it. And when you're eating ribs, it seems OK."
- Crème brûlée at Finale Desserterie & Bakery. "I go there when I just feel like having something sweet and don't want to have to go through a whole meal."

← "It's really fresh. The volcano roll is phenomenal."

JAMAICA PLAIN

MARCO SUAREZ, CANARY SQUARE, THE SALTY PIG

Suarez, a Jamaica Plain native, says the neighborhood is unique in its quirkiness. "It's still a section that doesn't have a lot of big business," he says. "You have that old hippie vibe." Restaurant-wise, this translates to small spots and intimate customer knowledge. Says Suarez: "Even if you go to a heavy hitter like Dunkin' Donuts, they already know your drink."

- Jamón Ibérico and white wine at Tres Gatos: "I would get a couple of small plates and a glass of white wine, and sit on the patio."
- Sweet potato, kale and almond fritters at Vee Vee: "I would get beer, and something hearty and local. They do a lot of farm-to-table stuff there."
- TT Burger at Ten Tables: "I would go to the bar and get the burger and a beer. It's one of the few places in JP that's really a chef-driven restaurant."
- Maple butter-walnut ice cream, affogato style at J.P. Licks: "It's a solid, good ice cream. The butter really adds a lot of body to it, so it's really rich. I stir a little into my espresso and call it a day."

CENTRAL/ INMAN/ KENDALL

TONY MAWS, CRAIGIE ON MAIN

In the Central/Inman/Kendall area, it's all about being a free spirit, according to Maws. "There are a lot of restaurants with different identities," he says. "You can walk two blocks and see very different neighborhoods, and I think the restaurants are like that."

- Guinness at the Druid. "They pour a good, honest Guinness. It's a small little place where I can just be, and the people are great."

↑ "I would sit outside with a beautiful bottle of wine and grilled fish on a summer night."

→ "It's one of the few places in JP that's really a chef-driven restaurant."

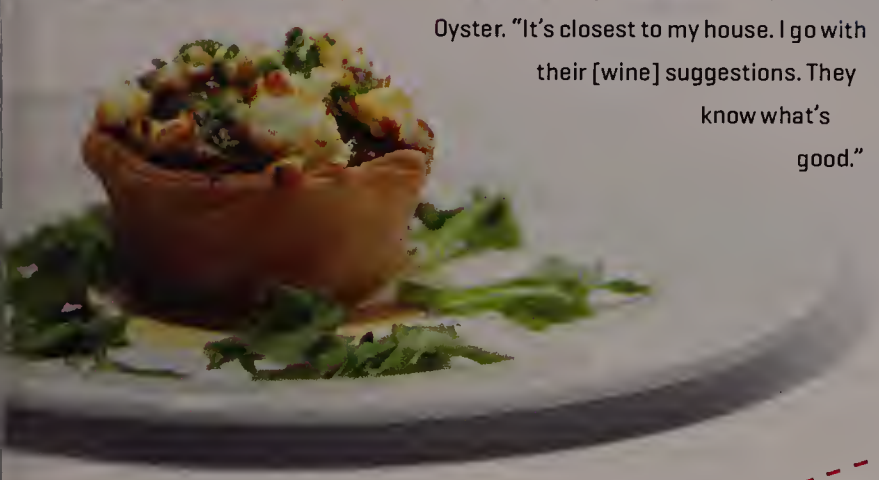
- Fried green tomatoes with buttermilk dressing and beer at Hungry Mother. "It's summer; the tomatoes are tasty and wine- and beer-friendly. They like smaller producers doing funky things that are off the beaten path."
- Grilled shrimp and chorizo at The Blue Room. "An overlooked restaurant. I'm an alum, so I'm not as objective. The wine list is phenomenal—they love acid, mineral-driven wines. I would sit outside with a beautiful bottle of wine and grilled fish on a summer night."
- Cocktails at Green Street. "I would tuck myself in a corner upstairs and have some nice, evening-ending cocktails. At the end of the meal, I tend to like things that are rye- or Scotch-based."



NORTH END

DANTE DE MAGISTRIS, DANTE, IL CASALE

De Magistris has lived in the North End for nearly a decade, partly due to its proximity to his Cambridge restaurant, but also on account of friendly neighbors and the cluster of restaurants. "It depends on the hour for the most part, but there are enough bars where you can pop around from one place to another," he says. "Just endless options."

- Oysters and prosecco at Neptune Oyster. "It's closest to my house. I go with their [wine] suggestions. They know what's good."

"One time I had a grass-fed porterhouse steak that was probably 24 ounces, and it was just grilled perfectly." ↗

- Anatra tart and a Negroni at Lucca. "The Negroni will get me hungrier and open up my palate. The Anatra tart is confit duck in a really buttery, flaky, tart shell, with caramelized onions, melted goat cheese, spinach and a mustard beurre blanc."
- Egg-yolk ravioli and grilled veal porterhouse at Prezza. "The pasta is so thin; it cooks really fast to keep the egg yolk in the center, and when you break it, it oozes out into brown butter, sage and lots of Parmigiano-Reggiano. One time I had a grass-fed porterhouse veal steak that was probably 24 ounces, and it was just grilled perfectly."
- Neapolitan pizza at Bricco. "If it's past 11 pm, I would go to Bricco and eat a pizza for dessert, because I can. After 11 is when they fire up their brick oven, and their pizza is the closest thing to a true Neapolitan pizza that I have seen in this part of the world."

SOUTH END

BARBARA LYNCH, NO. 9 PARK, B&G OYSTERS, THE BUTCHER SHOP, SPORTELLO, MENTON

With two restaurants on Tremont Street, Lynch has had twice the opportunity to watch diners get smitten with the South End. "People from around the world come to B&G for a lobster roll and end up falling in love with the neighborhood," she says. While Lynch acknowledges that the area has changed since she set up shop there eight years ago, it's retained its essence. "I love that the independent spirit is still there."

↑ It's definitely a go-to for post-shift drinks."

- Martinis at Hamersley's Bistro. "I'd kick the night off with martinis on the patio at Hamersley's, but I might end up staying for his chicken. That dish, and the restaurant, are classic South End."
- Razor clams and calamar at Toro. "I love the atmosphere and the food at Toro, so I would head there next and hope that the razor clams were on the menu that night. If not, I'd have the calamar. You can't go wrong with the seafood there."
- Chicken and rapini stir-fry and dumplings at Myers + Chang. "It's another chef-owned restaurant with plenty of personality."
- Cocktails at the Beehive. "I don't have much of a sweet tooth, so I'd save the calories for cocktails and wrap up the night by heading to the bar downstairs at the Beehive to meet up with my staff. It's definitely a go-to for post-shift drinks."

SOMERVILLE

KEITH POOLER, BERGAMOT

Pooler credits his Somerville neighbors for renewed interest in the area's dining scene. "It's a young crowd, and there are more artsy people than 10 or 15 years ago," he says. "I think that they're city-oriented and supportive of Somerville." While the area has come a long way food-wise, he thinks it's only going to get better. "There's lots of city development that's happening, and I think that because of price points it's going to draw the chef- and owner-driven pieces of property."

↑ "It's great for small plates and for meeting friends for drinks."

- Manhattans at Highland Kitchen. "Joe [McGuirk] is one of the best bartenders in the city, and it's right down the street from where I live."
- Chipirones rellenos, conejo escabechado, patatas bravas at Dalí Restaurant & Tapas Bar. "It's great for small plates and for meeting friends for drinks."
- Pizza at Posto. "I suggest the pork soppresata or the rosemary ham with fig, fior di latte and arugula. The crust is a little breadier than usual, and they do it in a brick oven."
- Sweet cream ice cream at J.P. Licks. "Just that in a sugar cone and I'm a happy person."

BACK BAY

BRIAN POE, POE'S KITCHEN AT THE RATTLESNAKE

Although Poe lives in Revere, his Back Bay restaurant has him familiar with the center of the city. The draw of the neighborhood, in his opinion, is consistency. "You have talented chefs operating all of these restaurants, and you know they're giving their best on everything," he says. While the Back Bay can be swanky, Poe says you can keep fine dining low-key depending on where you sit. "Go straight to the empty corner," he says. "That's where you find the people that are just hanging out."

"The burger has been written up left and right, but there's a reason—it's that good."

- Crudo and a basil-lime gimlet at Via Matta. "I go to the side bar room—it's super laid-back, like a dark bar, and there's a good culinary crowd that hangs out there."
- Salt cod fritters and riesling at Avila Modern Mediterranean. "It's got that upscale feel to it, but head to the bar where you get more windows and watch the traffic go by. They execute the salt cod fritters really well. It's simple and straightforward."
- The Bristol burger at Bristol Lounge. "You're surrounded by powerful people, but you don't worry about it; you're having a straightforward, great dish. The burger has been written up left and right, but there's a reason—it's that good."
- Chocolate soufflé and port at Bistro du Midi. "I would sit at the bar with the patio windows open. It makes you feel like Ernest Hemingway in his happy days."

ALLSTON

SUZI MAITLAND, TRINA'S STARLITE LOUNGE

An Allston resident for years, Maitland has borne witness to the neighborhood's high restaurant turnover. But this isn't always a bad thing. "I think the greatest part of eating out in Allston is the diversity in a small area," she says. "There is always a new spot opening."

"I've fallen in love with the garlic knots."

▸ The Man with No Name at Deep Ellum. "For cocktails, there's no better place in Allston. And they have an extensive beer list, not to mention a cozy outside deck."

▸ Garlic bread knots at La Befana Pizzeria. "I've found a fairly new gourmet pizzeria down the street from Deep Ellum called Le Befana. The owners had run a successful place on Cape Cod and have opened in Allston. I've fallen in love with the garlic knots. These are buttery and soft, and covered with tons of parm."

▸ Spicy seafood udon at Fish Market. "Everything is fresh, and the staff is very pleasant."

▸ Fried dough with cinnamon, sugar and honey butter at Soul Fire. "For dessert, I'm a sucker for everything Southern. Of course, if you're not a sweet tooth, you could eat your weight in side dishes. Mac'n'cheese is good at any time of day."

CHINATOWN

JOANNE CHANG, MYERS + CHANG, FLOUR BAKERY + CAFE

With her talent for pork-and-chive dumplings and hot-and-sour soup, it should come as little surprise that Chang knows her way around Chinatown. The Leather District dweller loves the area for its range of options. "There are so many restaurants to choose from, from holes-in-the-wall, to a bit more spiffed up, to everywhere in between," she says. "It's always fresh and fun, and you can literally eat at a different place each night for probably a month."

▸ Jack-and-Cokes at the Corner Pub. "It's not a fancy place at all. But they pour a stiff drink!"

▸ Spicy salt shrimp at New Jumbo Seafood. "It's spicy and crunchy, and reminds me of eating popcorn. I can't stop."

▸ Ma Po tofu, sautéed Chinese watercress Furu-style at Taiwan Cafe. "The Ma Po tofu is big chunks of silky tofu in a fiery red sauce, and the Chinese watercress is stir-fried with a fermented bean curd and tastes so much better than it sounds. With a big bowl of white rice, this is my favorite dinner, hands down."

"My favorite is simple black milk tea."

SHADES OF GRAZE

THE TEAM AT Journeyman hoped people would be busting through the doors to savor their indie chic cuisine, but they didn't quite expect someone to drive an SUV into the dining room. Structural repairs have brought the restaurant to a pause, but fans of its innovative fare can get their fix each Saturday at the Union Square Farmers' Market. Line cook Dan Hanken has fired up the grill to give barbecue standards like pulled pork the Journeyman treatment with hyper-local ingredients and whimsical twists. Stroll the market post-feast and snack on freshly picked fruits and veggies from the same purveyors you'll find on Journeyman's menu. SARAH DWYER

Journeyman Summer BBQ is on Saturdays at 11 am at the Union Square Farmers Market, Union Square, Somerville (617-718-2333). journeymanrestaurant.com.

Yes, We Can

Shut Up and Drive For 20 years, the Red Sox wives have knocked it out of the park with their Can & Cash Drive for the Greater Boston Food Bank. In 2010, they collected enough food to provide meals for around 37,000 people—enough to feed almost every fan at Fenway. The players' plus-ones will give away autographed photographs of the Sox stars in exchange for non-perishable food products or monetary donations. You don't even need a ticket to drop by the Park on August 5-6 to say hello.

Bad Teacher ★ ½ Cameron Diaz gives it her all as a slutty, gold-digging English teacher fond of snoozing through class with a hangover. Embezzling school funds for a boob-job she hopes will impress her dorky sugar daddy–to-be, Justin Timberlake, she smokes weed, struts and generally tries way too hard in this depressingly inert effort. Directed by Jake Kasdan, the film lurches from one under-realized set-piece to the next, setting up jokes that never pay off and stranding a talented ensemble in a vortex of missed opportunities. Most of the actors wind up drenched in flop-sweat, throwing themselves into caricatured performances that clash with the banal surroundings and under-developed screenplay. The movie looks awfully cheap, and it's edited in such a way that allows failed jokes to hang in the air for eternity. Credit Jason Segel, who breezes into the proceedings as a happy, horny gym teacher, off-handedly dropping one-liners while everyone around him plays to the rafters. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Buck ★★★ Though we never see Buck Brannaman actually whisper to a horse, his folksy drawl is so soothing it's no surprise he was the inspiration for Nicholas Evans' novel The Horse Whisperer and informed Robert Redford's performance in the 1998 film. His training favors positive reinforcement and benefits from an almost supernatural patience. Brannaman exudes empathy for these animals with his "gentle and firm" mantra. Looking a bit like Anderson Cooper without the harsh angles, the film's subject carries himself with a laconic calm that's compulsively watchable, even when it starts to feel like there's nothing in life that cannot be boiled down to an equestrian metaphor. He's good company. Clearly enraptured, director Cindy Meehl follows Brannaman on the road for a stretch, overindulging in panoramic Western vistas that test the limits of digital photography. Buck's secret weapon arrives when we become privy to Brannaman's troubled past. There's something deeply moving about watching a man transcend his tragic childhood and use the hard lessons he's learned for the good of others. (At Kendall Square.)

The Hangover Part II ★ ½ Second verse, same as the first—except this time without any of the funny parts. Most of what made director Todd Phillips' raunchy 2008 original such a beloved blockbuster was the thrill of discovery. At heart a detective story, the tale of three henpecked suburbanites retracing their steps after a bachelor party benefited from an unfamiliar cast and surprising situations. This unnecessary sequel slavishly follows that exact formula almost scene for scene, upping the ante with gross-out squalor and an air of violent unpleasantness, while remaining almost entirely devoid of wit. This time Bangkok stands in for Vegas, there's a monkey instead of a baby, the missing tooth is replaced by a facial tattoo and the prostitutes...well, don't ask. Much like Mike Myers' dreaded Austin Powers sequels, it trots out all the jokes you laughed at last time and beats them like a dead horse. Shockingly well-staged and expertly photographed by people who really should know better, it's a cynical, ugly cash grab. (In the suburbs.)

Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, Part II ★★★ In keeping with the slavish, Classics Illustrated film-to-screen transcriptions preferred by the ravenous fan base, the latest Harry Potter picture doesn't quite hold up as a movie of its own. This series has been dogged from day one by a preaching-to-the-choir mentality and an unwillingness to adapt to any real cinematic structure. BBC director David Yates (who helmed the final four installments) has an eye for spectacle and a bent towards TV-miniseries dramaturgy. It's nearly impossible for us muggles to even remotely understand what's happening anymore. But this final Potter movie flaunts an undeniable pop-apocalyptic grandeur, and it's finally got a freakin' ending. Ralph Fiennes' nose-less Voldemort keeps getting beat down by the upstart kids and their magical gobbledygook. With all the exposition dumps having taken place during the previous picture, we're now just watching one bloody payoff and epic battle sequence after another. I had no idea what was going on most of the time, but it's rather thrilling all the same. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Horrible Bosses ★★ A ramshackle assembly of recycled characters and conflicting tones duct-taped together at odd angles, director Seth Gordon's contribution to the summer of R-rated comedy squanders a wonderfully relatable premise: Who hasn't dreamed of murdering his employer at one point or another? Jasons Bateman and Sudeikis, along with It's Always Sunny in Philadelphia's ace screamer Charlie Day, star as middle-aged schlubs terrorized by irrational

NAUGHTY BITS

Timberlake and Kunis bring some NSA fun for all.

Friends with Benefits ★★★
Starring Justin Timberlake, Mila Kunis, Patricia Clarkson, Jenna Elfman, Richard Jenkins and Woody Harrelson. Screenplay by Keith Merryman, David A. Newman and Will Gluck. Directed by Will Gluck. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

DIDN'T WE JUST SEE THIS movie?

January's No Strings Attached starred charmless lunk Ashton Kutcher, exhibiting zero chemistry with his "sex-friend" Natalie Portman, in a tale of two ridiculously good-looking 20-somethings foolishly attempting to enjoy one another's bodies without any of that pesky love or relationship stuff getting in the way. You can probably guess what happens. Dolorously directed by Ivan Reitman, the movie squandered a killer supporting cast on two vacuous leads who didn't even seem to like one another very much. It was kind of a slog.

A mere six months later, we've got Justin Timberlake and Mila Kunis starring as two ridiculously good-looking 20-somethings, foolishly attempting to enjoy one another's supervisors. Taking terrible advice from a "murder consultant" (Jamie Foxx), these sad-sacks dream up a triple-homicide conspiracy that—much like Horrible Bosses itself—never really makes it past the idea phase. The screenplay feels like a first draft, suffering from a crippling lack of consistency and the delusion that dirty words are, in and of themselves, hilarious. The characterizations of our leads are sketchy at best, relying on shorthand from previous roles. The movie can't quite figure out a way to get all three bosses into the same scenario, or even the same comic universe. It feels like channel-surfing. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Larry Crowne ★★ ½ A long-running "It Gets Better" video for broke, middle-aged white dudes, Tom Hanks' second feature directorial effort is a deeply goofy movie, prone to sitcom staging and comic groaners. Bereft of conflict, the film coasts along in second gear on breezy charm and star wattage. But somewhere along the line, Hanks' sweet naïveté began to grow on me: It got better. Hanks stars as a downsized 50-something who enrolls in his local community college. He also starts riding a scooter and making friends with minorities. Given a hilarious hipster makeover, our irrepressible everyman eventually charms his alcoholic professor (Julia Roberts). Not much happens in Larry Crowne, but there's a generosity of spirit that reminded me of Jonathan Demme, who perhaps not coincidentally produced Hanks' delightful 1996 debut, That Thing You Do! It shouldn't be so rare to find a movie that feels like it was made by people who actually like people. Hanks' filmmaking needs work but his worldview eventually becomes contagious. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Midnight in Paris ★★★ ½ I know. Everyone always tells you that the new one is Woody Allen's comeback film. I've been burned by that rap, too. But this is a lighter-than-air, casually profound piece that calls to mind The Purple Rose of Cairo in its magical realism and ruefully funny undercurrents. Owen Wilson stars as a hack Hollywood screenwriter vacationing in Paris who finds himself magically transported to the 1920s, where he boozes it up with Ernest Hemingway, F. Scott Fitzgerald and Adrien Brody's hilariously self-infatuated Salvador Dalí. The punchline comes early: While Wilson was always pining for "the good old days," once he gets there, he discovers that everybody else shares his longing. Gorgeously shot by cinematographer Daris Khondji and directed by Allen with a care we haven't seen in eons, it's a deceptively slight exploration of nostalgia as beautiful quicksand. The only thing keeping this from being a classic is Allen's typically misogynistic treatment of Rachel McAdams' character. Otherwise, it's lovely. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Page One: Inside The New York Times ★★★ Inherently fascinating but fatally flawed, director Andrew Rossi's documentary about the old gray lady's struggle for solvency bites off way more than one movie can chew. Granted limited access during an exceedingly dire time for the newspaper industry, Page One attempts to chronicle the death-match between old and new media by trotting out some familiar talking bodies without any of that pesky love or relationship stuff getting in the way. You can probably guess what happens, yet Friends with Benefits is delightful all the same. Directed by Easy A's Will Gluck, it's a sexy, funny and very familiar picture carried off by an effervescent atmosphere and some phenomenal chemistry between these two stars. In other words, it's the singers—not the song.

Kunis stars as a type-A Manhattan headhunter who places Timberlake's West Coast web guru in a ludicrously high-paying job at GQ magazine. The courtship is initially all business, with a spark of something else going on during her manic sales pitch. But since she's the only person he knows in New York, and her annual bonus depends on his job performance, these two kids crazily decide to just keep things platonic. They're both still reeling from bad breakups with uncredited guest stars, so it probably seems like a mature, logical choice just to cozy up with Netflix rentals and late-night chat sessions. Until, of course, they get drunk one night and finally realize that they look like Justin Timberlake and Mila Kunis.

The ground rules are strict: it's purely physical. This leads to a lot of raw, refreshingly ribald banter and a decent running gag about Timberlake always sneezing at the most inappropriate of moments. Friends with Benefits is a surprisingly dirty movie, but it embraces human sexuality as something so common, happy and fun that I'd prefer to just call it "naughty." There are more giggles than grunts, which is somehow way sexier than most modern pictures that make a big show out of trying to be erotic.

Of course, complications ensue. She's got a boozed up, slutty single mom (deftly played by Patricia Clarkson) who can never quite remember who Kunis' father was; her story keeps changing. Timberlake's dad (the great Richard Jenkins) is still living out West and slowly succumbing to Alzheimer's. Big sister (Jenna Elfman) is quickly getting to a point where she is going to need some extra help taking care of the old man, so it wasn't exactly an opportune time for baby brother to up and move cross country.

Can you really just keep on boinking your best friend without other feelings seeping in? Well, certainly not in a Hollywood movie. But credit Friends with Benefits for arriving at this foregone conclusion with style and panache. Director Will Gluck made a superstar out of Emma Stone, and he sure knows how to photograph his actors while they're firing off rapid repartee.

Timberlake at last gets to embrace both his natural charisma and SNL-host dorky side, undercutting all that bringing sexyback with goofy character flourishes. (His remedial math skills are consistently hilarious.) Kunis' compact hotness has made her seem miscast in other pictures, but here she gives her character a hectic stridency born out of insecurity. Those doe-eyes work wonders for her in this regard. The two click so well in part because they're both so deeply neurotic.

My big quibble is that Gluck really needs to relax. As in his otherwise sparkling Easy A, every time a formula beat plays out he feels the need to write a little zinger wherein a character points out how much this is like something that would happen in a romantic comedy. Please drop the Gen-X quotation-mark defense mechanisms and just roll with it.

Friends with Benefits is also very much a picture of its moment, and by moment I mean a couple of years ago when it was written. Flash mobs, iPads and jokes about Captain "Sully" Sullenberger take up a mite too much screentime and give off the faint whiff of trend-chasing past the sell-by date.

Still, I enjoyed spending time with these cute kids, and was rooting for them to get together at the end. (As opposed to most 20-something rom-coms, where I hope they all die from avian flu.) I know there's a great joke in here somewhere about Mila pulling a Black Swan and stealing her old costar Natalie Portman's role, but frankly I was too charmed by this picture to try and sort it out. ✖✖✖ heads and wondering what will become of our great nation without The New York Times setting the agenda. More interesting is a portrait of the foul-mouthed journalist David Carr, chain-smoking and trash-talking his way through one paltry Media Desk assignment after another, insulting folks who are unlucky enough to raise his ire. This scattershot picture doesn't attempt to answer the many questions it raises and fails to find a groove during the later reels. When Carr sinks his teeth into an honest investigative piece, we finally see the editorial push and pull of responsible journalism, a striking contrast to all the bloggers who hogged the screen beforehand. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton Cinema.)

Project Nim ★★★ ½ A fitting documentary prequel to August's Rise of the Planet of the Apes, this harrowing tale follows one cheekily named Nim Chimpsky, a chimpanzee raised as a human boy by a bunch of annoying hippies on an NYU scientific grant. Breast-fed from birth and taught to wear shorts and funny T-shirts, poor Nim learns the basics of sign language and betrayal while his self-involved university sponsors run in and out of funding (and in and out of bed with each other). Never once considering (or even understanding) their subject's innate ape-ness, a parade of appalling talking heads spew rancid self-justification into the camera, while Nim gets shipped off to a crowded medical research facility. Director James Marsh, who helmed the magnificent Man on Wire, employs a similarly slick style that here might be a bit too glossy for its own good. But there's no way for this story not to make you crazy, and in seeing Nim's flickers of intelligent communication, the outrage turns to sorrow. (At Coolidge Corner.)

Sarah's Key ★ ½ Isn't it a little early in the year for an Oscar-grubbing Holocaust movie? Working from the novel by Tatiana De Rosnay, director Gilles Paquet-Brenner follows spiky journalist Kristin Scott Thomas and family, who move into a fashionable Parisian apartment owned for half the century by her bourgeoisie in-laws. With the real estate market being what it was back in 1942, how did these folks ever score such a fancy flat? Well, it turns out the liquidation of France's Jewish ghetto was somehow involved, and we're sent on an ever-misleading string of flashbacks and seemingly sinister family ties that all basically revolve around one pushy reporter feeling guilty that she married into money. Exploitative to a fault, the second storyline follows our title character as she tries to escape the camps and rescue a kid brother who she locked in this particular apartment's closet. At least the ghastly payoff is left off-screen, but there's no excuse for this dour film to march onward for another hour after that. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Super 8 ★★ Proving you can mimic a visual signature without understanding any of the reasons why it's successful, writer-director J.J. Abrams fashions a slavishly nostalgic tribute to Steven Spielberg films of the late '70s and early '80s. Cribbing entire shot-lists from Close Encounters and E.T., Super 8 tells the tale of kids from broken homes trying to make a zombie movie, when a train accident suddenly frees a ferociously disappointing alien. Abrams nails all his mentor's patented slow-dolly shots toward characters gazing upwards in wide-eyed wonder, but he's lacking Spielberg's sense of magic—not to mention his storytelling efficiency. Super 8 doesn't make much sense and lacks momentum. Plot complications are arbitrary and so easily reversed, you could probably remove any given reel of the film without altering the outcome. Saving it from complete disaster is young Joel Courtney as a lovestruck movie nerd, and an amazing turn from Elle Fanning as the heartsick gal of his dreams. The rest is bad karaoke. (In the suburbs.)

Transformers: Dark of the Moon ★ To say this is the best Transformers movie isn't saying much. The picture surpasses its notorious forebears by being visually accomplished, occasionally coherent and nowhere near as jaw-droppingly racist as the two films that came before. Am I damning with faint praise? Well, it's also mind-numbingly boring. Some folks have been applauding Dark of the Moon's final reels, a solid (no kidding) hour of rock'em, sock'em fighting robots, toppling skyscrapers and city-wide devastation on a scale never seen before in movies. Personally, I was so bored I wanted to take a nap. Hamstrung by the constraints of 3-D technology, Bay finally has to hold a shot for more than three seconds and plan out his action sequences. But he still has no idea how to pace a scene. There are no stakes, and the action never rises or falls. There's just one single note of sensory overload. After 15 minutes of this I was checking my watch; a half hour later I was rolling my eyes. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Tree of Life ★★★ ½ "Other people make movies; Terrence Malick builds cathedrals," my brilliant colleague Matt Zoller Seitz is fond of saying. This dream project for the director, some 30 years in the making, feels like the ultimate expression of Malick's particular worldview. With even the title flirting with self-parody, the picture seeks to reconcile one child's troubled upbringing in the 1950s with the entire history of the universe. It is by turns rapturous, astonishing and occasionally silly. I adore the ambition and am in awe of the accomplishment, even if I'm still not sure it all hangs together. Taking the form of a whispered prayer to a God who may or may not be listening, the fractured narrative unspools in symphonic movements. But after one viewing, I'm still not convinced that Malick is quite able to reconcile the quotidian with the cosmic. His final, surreal sequence on a mystical beach is unfortunate. But good heavens, the film is a wonder to behold. Malick's reach exceeds his grasp—but that is one hell of a reach. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

X-Men: First Class ★★ ½ Opting for a top-to-bottom reboot after the dreadful Wolverine, Marvel Comics' most allegory-friendly franchise sets the wayback machine to the early 1960s for this diverting, if pointless, prequel. A surprisingly credible James McAvoy plays the young psychic Professor Charles Xavier, while movie-star in the making Michael Fassbender fills in for Ian McKellan as the embittered Holocaust survivor Magneto. Cobbled together from several different scripts and sped into production on a truncated 10-month schedule, X-Men: First Class is a rush-job that has a few moments good enough to make you wish the entire film was better. Helmed by Kick-Ass director Matthew Vaughn, with his camera set to maximum leer, the movie revels in Playboy Club fashions and scantily clad coeds. Suffering from a severe case of overcrowding, First Class doesn't even get around to the obligatory training montage until over 90 minutes into the picture. By the time everyone is done introducing themselves, it's already time for the climactic action scene. Should a sequel be in the cards, a little patience would go a long way. (At Somerville Theatre and in the suburbs.)

Bigger Boat Required

Bite Me It's been nearly 40 years since John Williams' infamous two-note theme made moviegoers' blood run cold and paranoia of ocean monsters skyrocket. Spielberg's classic fish tale still sends chills up our spines, although more frightening is the fact that the book Jaws was inspired by a series of shark attacks off the Jersey Shore during the summer of 1916. BEATBOX REDUX

Big Audio Dynamite strikes back with its emblematic audio attack.

Big Audio Dynamite plays House of Blues on Aug. 2.

'THE HORSES ARE ON THE track." With that spoken-word clip, Big Audio Dynamite was off and running with "The Bottom Line," the first hit from its 1985 debut of stuttering dance beats, sleek guitar chords, slinky bass lines and spaghetti-western samples.

This Is Big Audio Dynamite gave new life to Mick Jones, former lead guitarist of the Clash. On that album, he topped the catchy electro-funk of his former band's Combat Rock with splice-and-dice elements closer to hip-hop.

"They said we were ahead of our time," says punk filmmaker Don Letts, who became singer/guitarist Jones' foil on vocals, sound effects and percussion.

"Lucky for us, maybe time has caught up. A lot of the basic elements that we were messing around with back then are still the kind of things you find [today]. Whether it's the reggae bass lines or hip-hop beats or rock 'n' roll guitar, these things are still getting me out of bed, anyway."

Make that out of bed and around the globe. The British band's original lineup hits House of Blues on Aug. 2 with a tour promoting an expanded reissue of This Is Big Audio Dynamite.

The reissue coincided with Jones touring as a guest guitarist with Gorillaz. "I think that whetted his appetite to be on the road again," muses Letts. When Jones proposed reprising Big Audio Dynamite with drummer Greg Roberts, keyboardist Dan Donovan and bassist Leo "E-Zee Kill" Williams, Letts says, "We all jumped at it."

For his part, Letts had been working as a BBC host and DJ before embarking on Big Audio Dynamite's new chapter. "I'm kinda freaked by the whole thing," he says from his West London home. "Every time I'm onstage, I'm looking at 'x' amount of people, and it's like, 'I'm in a band now.' I'd resigned myself to a quieter life, but hey, it ain't bad."

In the mid-'70s, Letts ran a hip London clothing shop that played dub reggae. Then, he began deejaying at a burgeoning punk club. "I did turn a lot of punks on to reggae, but truth be told, white working-class people were gravitating toward black music for their fix of rebellion," says Letts, 55, adding, "How could I not get into punk rock? It was about attitude, empowerment and identity. I'm third-generation, British-born black, and in those days, I was looking for where I fit in."

> "Ultimately it's a mix of the organic and the digital... Things can fall apart, and I kind of like that in this digital age."

At first, Letts found his place in film, documenting the London scene in The Punk Rock Movie, then directing videos for the Clash ("Rock the Casbah"), Musical Youth ("Pass the Dutchie") and the Pretenders ("Back on the Chain Gang").

"I wanted to be a filmmaker, but didn't really feel the way forward until punk rock came along with the whole DIY ethic," Letts says. "Instead of picking up a guitar, I picked up a Super 8 camera and made it up as I went along."

He brought his camera on the Clash's "White Riot" tour and managed opening act the Slits. Later, after being enlisted by Jones for Bad Audio Dynamite, Letts found a calling onstage and in the studio. He explains, "While the guys laid down the tracks, I'd be watching films I thought were appropriate with the intention of lifting bits of dialogue and samples to drop in and add another dimension."

Letts' work predated legal controversies over sampling. "The record company didn't know what to do, so what they did was nothing, and we got away with murder," he says.

Letts, who won't call himself a musician, triggers the original samples on an updated keyboard still affixed with stickers as a guide. "I'm not flying in things from analog cassettes anymore," he says. "Ultimately it's a mix of the organic and the digital... Things can fall apart, and I kind of like that in this digital age."

In addition to hits that include "C'mon Every Beatbox," "E=MC²," "Medicine Show" and "Rush," Big Audio Dynamite has been breaking out its new song "Rob Peter, Pay Paul" at live shows. So is a new record on the horizon? "We don't want to overstay our welcome, so that really depends on the will of the people," says Letts. "I'm definitely enjoying it. I'm at an age where I could be having a midlife crisis. It's either get a Harley-Davidson or join a band." ✖✖✖

Follow His Lead

Up Tempo Award-winning composer and Berklee professor (and one of The Improper Bostonian's most eligible singles of 2011) Omar Thomas brings together some of Boston's best young jazz players in his Large Ensemble. With a set list culled from their forthcoming album, I Am, the 18 musicians perform at the Berklee Performance Center on July 27. Thomas is known for precocity (he stepped into the big-band spotlight at age 19) and for juxtaposing full-bodied sounds with airy interludes. Now his work attracts critical praise for its fluidity, passion and "intense, and crystal clear emotional content." Yes, and it sounds good. Jeffrey Cattel

Paper Hewn

Facing Filigree

Though the art world has a tendency to exalt the new, looking backward has its satisfactions. In her forthcoming exhibition at the Bromfield Gallery, artist Elizabeth Alexander employs a variety of media to revisit her personal history as the daughter of a craftsman. Welder's Daughter: Safe and Powerless conjurs times gone by using laser-cut materials, intricately cut paper art and delicate soapstone flowers. Alexander reframes her past through August 27. Nicholas Sobel

Paranormal Activity

Lucky Number 13

In the wizarding world of Jim Butcher's best-selling Dresden Files series, Hogwarts is replaced with the halls of government. Over the course of 12 novels, detective and magic-man Harry Dresden worked to find a balance between the natural and the supernatural before meeting an untimely demise in the previous installment. But in Dresden's realm, being dead doesn't mean you're lifeless, and the detective is back to save his friends in Ghost Story. Butcher will talk about the method behind his magic at the Harvard Coop on Aug. 3. Hilary White

THE VIEW FROM THE TOP

Raising the Roof

There are worse places to spend a balmy spring evening than the top of the Taj Hotel, overlooking the Public Garden in full bloom. In fact, I forgive anyone who didn't say hello to me at the second annual Friends Council Roof Party for the Boys & Girls Clubs; the view was a spectacular distraction.

Then again, so was the uniformly good-looking crowd, which included such pre-face-lift socialites as Ashley Wisneski, Maggie Moran and Kelly Boullet, the latters' husbands, Bill and Nicolas, salty dog Peter Creighton, the North End's answer to Liz and Dick, Matteo Gallo and Nicole Velucci, the achingly lovely Sophia Carroll, Chappaquidnick Justin Dangel, a woman who said, "Cute dress. Too bad about the girl wearing it," and another who said, "A guy asked me to give him a chest bump just to see my boobs pop out of my dress."

The sold-out crowd watched a hip-hop performance by dancers from the Blue Hill Club (that's Dorchester for all you newbies), and the speaking program was blessedly brief. All in all, a lovely evening that earned bonus points because I got a flirtatious look from a leggy blonde, and she wasn't even a drag queen.

Food, Glorious Food

This year, Chefs in Shorts was more like a wet T-shirt contest, but the drizzle did little to dampen spirits at the fund-raiser for the Greater Boston Food Bank, held at the Seaport Hotel/World Trade Center.

Some of the city's best chefs (all violating the dress code, I might add) lined the outdoor promenade, and the smoke from their fires combined with the humidity to make a mouth-watering aroma that clung to my clothes for the rest of the evening. Later on that night, someone asked me what "smoky cologne" I was wearing. Even the sushi station smelled like barbecue.

Among the notables on hand: National Geographic Channel heartthrob Pat Spain, photography's answer to Batman and Robin, Michael Blanchard and Ryan Stranz, hump-busting PR people J.P. Faiella and Mariellen Burns, such big-hearted big shots as Marc Orfaly, Tony Bettencourt and Josh Childs, three suckling pigs roasting on a spit behind the guys from Market, and a man who fist-pumped and said, "Lobster roll? Hell, yeah!" without the slightest trace of irony.

However, even funnier was one woman who dissed another by saying, "What the hell are you wearing? God gives us a pattern. You don't need that."

Say That Five Times Fast

Admittedly, when they asked me to emcee a party called Illumina La Notte, I thought I was getting involved in some heavy Harry Potter shit. But alas, the Young Patrons of the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum were simply using Italian on the invitation to their annual gala, which the Improper sponsored, at the Mandarin Oriental.

A live jazz trio greeted (and occasionally drowned out) the guests at a VIP cocktail hour, where head honcha Anne Hawley looked as lovely as always and invited everyone to take a good look at the architect's rendering of the museum's new Renzo Piano–designed wing. (The unanimous verdict: looks like an awesome place for a party.)

Present and accounted for: High priestess of goodness Jessica Gifford and her fiancé, the hale and hearty Andrew Nigretti, Texas hold 'em champion Julia Owens, cerulean-eyed beauty Julie Hume Gordon, her devastatingly handsome husband, Phil, sex bomb Bryan Flynn and his smokin' hot girlfriend, Joanna Humphrey, the champagne-loving Charley "Curly" Aldritch, bewitching blonde Laura Baldini, winemaker Brian Smith of Loca Linda (translation: "Crazy Beautiful"), and one woman who said, "I'm sorry. I didn't hear the last 10 things you said because I was busy sucking in my stomach."

The evening's best toast: three friends, comparing plans for the weekend, drank to "A well-spent weekend, spent getting wasted!" ✖✖✖

All Apologies

If I ever doubted that it's hard to make beautiful music, a recent staff karaoke night at Club Café seared the lesson onto my cringing brain. (I beg forgiveness from the damaged souls who witnessed any part of that disgraceful episode.) But beauty isn't always the point. If the purpose of art is truth, and the truth can be ugly or frightening, then assistant editor Kyle Wright's rendition of Cher's "If I Could Turn Back Time" was supremely artistic.

Musically, my own development ended at the age of 13, when my piano teacher—an alcoholic Australian who liked to erupt with ferocious bursts of Liszt between gin-and-tonics—stopped showing up on Monday evenings. Sure, I dabbled afterwards. A neglected acoustic guitar here. An ill-advised bagpipe lesson there. Once, I even sat through an episode of American Idol, although all it gave me was a feeling of frothing misanthropy. The high point of my musical life was a very brief stint as manager of an inept Celtic band, originally called the Drunken McFks. They played two concerts—one unpaid, the other for a keg of Natty Light—before dissolving in crapulence and ego. Last I heard, the lead singer was touring with Miss Saigon in the nether parts of Eastern Europe. But they lived up to their name.

The bands in our annual music roundup are all much better.

Once upon a time, there was a little salmon named Benny. He and his brothers and sisters grew up in the icy waters of the Atlantic Ocean. Benny was big and strong! How he loved to swim! In fact, Benny was the best swimmer in his entire school. One day, he and his friends saw a net – and jumped into it! And because Benny was the biggest, strongest, and freshest salmon of them all, the fishermen threw all of his friends back in the water, and sent Benny to Legal Sea Foods, where he became lunch for a hungry accountant.

The End.

Classically Untrained

THE NEW BLACK

"THERE AREN'T a lot of bands playing rock 'n' roll with the attitude that it needs to be played," says Bryan Baker. The 25-year-old prowls the stage as the sweaty, growling singer/guitarist of Black Baptista, an L.A. band fresh off a month-long residency at the famed Viper Room. At just 16, Baker earned a full scholarship to Berklee College of Music, where he learned the classic rules and how he eventually wanted to break them. "In school, everything has to be perfect, and as time's gone on, I've found I don't like that," he says. "I like when things are dirty and of the moment." With fellow Berklee alum Andy Sanesi on drums, Black Baptista recorded their debut album in just five hours, stocking it with 10 unapologetic first takes. Their tour brings them to Boston in October.

Good Eats

Pop Culture

The Dove bar is the prevailing standard, but indulgence needn't be suffocated in plastic and stocked in your grocer's freezer. At Serenade Chocolatier in Brookline Village, they dip local vanilla ice cream (as well as two flavors of sorbet) in an ultra-thick layer of 72 percent dark chocolate, and (if you like) roll the bar in either crushed almonds or rainbow sprinkles. Available through Labor Day, these decadent treats are a sophisticated way to ruin your dinner. ELIZABETH BOMZE

Cold comfort

Purveyors

Chic, C'est La Vie

Downtown Crossing might not be the first place you think of when searching for names like Louis Vuitton, Goyard or Hermès, but at Vintage Taste, resale veteran Heli Labadini stocks her small showroom with labels that read like a fashion-week roster. A straight-off-the-runway Ralph Lauren top will pair nicely with chunky Louboutins, but you'll want to top it off with a bag from Michael Kors. The designer himself stopped by recently to grab one of his creations for his personal archives, and was so impressed with the space that he allowed Labadini to stock his latest collection—her first foray into unused retail. And personalized attention is a given: Vintage Taste is open by appointment only. HILARY WHITE

Grier Genius

Stages of Life

Tony Award nominee and In Living Color vet David Alan Grier stars as Sportin' Life in the A.R.T.'s premiere of Suzan-Lori Parks' adaptation of The Gershwin's Porgy and Bess, running Aug. 17–Oct. 2 at the Loeb Drama Center. It moves to Broadway on Dec. 17.

Is stage acting much different from TV?

The stage is like a marathon and on TV you work in spurts, so it's anaerobic versus aerobic. It's also different in the sense that once you perfect something on TV, that's it, forever. You can think that you've perfected something on stage, but the audience is different every night and that affects you.

Are you surprised that Porgy and Bess is moving to Broadway in December?

I'm excited, but I'm not surprised. I think everyone knew that with the cast and crew and the ideas that we had, that it was a real possibility. I knew it was a goal.

How does this adaptation differ from the original opera?

It's very true to the Gershwins' vision, and we've had the encouragement of their estate through the entire process, but it still feels new. An opera is like four-and-a-half hours, and even though it's performed in English, it's impossible to understand. With dialogue comes experimentation.

How does living in Boston stack up to living in New York or Los Angeles?

Well, I live in Cambridge. Cambridge is not Boston. People here have the worst taste in clothing. I think I've seen one woman in heels. Everybody wears these hiking sandal things and shorts. [Laughs.] I've been to Boston many times, though, and there are some amazing restaurants and stores here. I saw David Mamet wearing this amazing coat, and I asked him where he got it. It was from Alan Bilzerian. And Louis is always great. KYLE WRIGHT

THE BRAHMIN AMERICAN CUISINE AND COCKTAILS
33 Stanhope St., Boston thebrahmin.com

Kickin' it Old School

The word Brahmin is often misused. A Brahmin is not a rich person, or a socialite or a combination of the two (we typically refer to those as Mezrichs). The term refers to the lineage of wealthy Yankee families, with names like Wigglesworth and Emerson, who presided over Boston society in previous centuries. They were rich, but not flashy: It was all about puritanical elegance.

Thankfully, Russ de Mariano and Ed Brooks avoided any embarrassing confusion by doing their research before opening their new spot, The Brahmin American Cuisine and Cocktails. Planting itself in the double-decker space that previously housed 33 Restaurant & Lounge, the ultra-mod interior has been transformed into a salute to one of Boston's most important subcultures.

"These people liked the finer things in life, but they didn't like a big scene," says de Mariano, motioning to one of the many old photos he's collected for the space. "We wanted this to be a place where you can come and stay the whole night." The duo also owns Red Sky in Faneuil Hall, but the two venues seem worlds apart. "Here, it's more about the neighborhood," he says.

A wraparound copper bar offers plenty of standing room and leads the way to a more intimate dining area. "There are a lot of ways to create private spaces," de Mariano says, moving aside a heavy drape. Leather sofas and club chairs offer additional cozy niches. Downstairs, the last remnants of 33's decor, most noticeably the bar's sculptural back, are worked into the new aesthetic with antique knickknacks.

The cocktail list augments the theme by borrowing monikers from Brahmin boldfacers, like the Crowninshield Manhattan (a Fernet- and St-Germain-spiked spin on the original) or the Saltonstall (with bourbon, raspberry puree and lime). It's a gimmick that could've backfired, but something about these old names finding sanctuary at a bar doesn't seem too contrived. KYLE WRIGHT

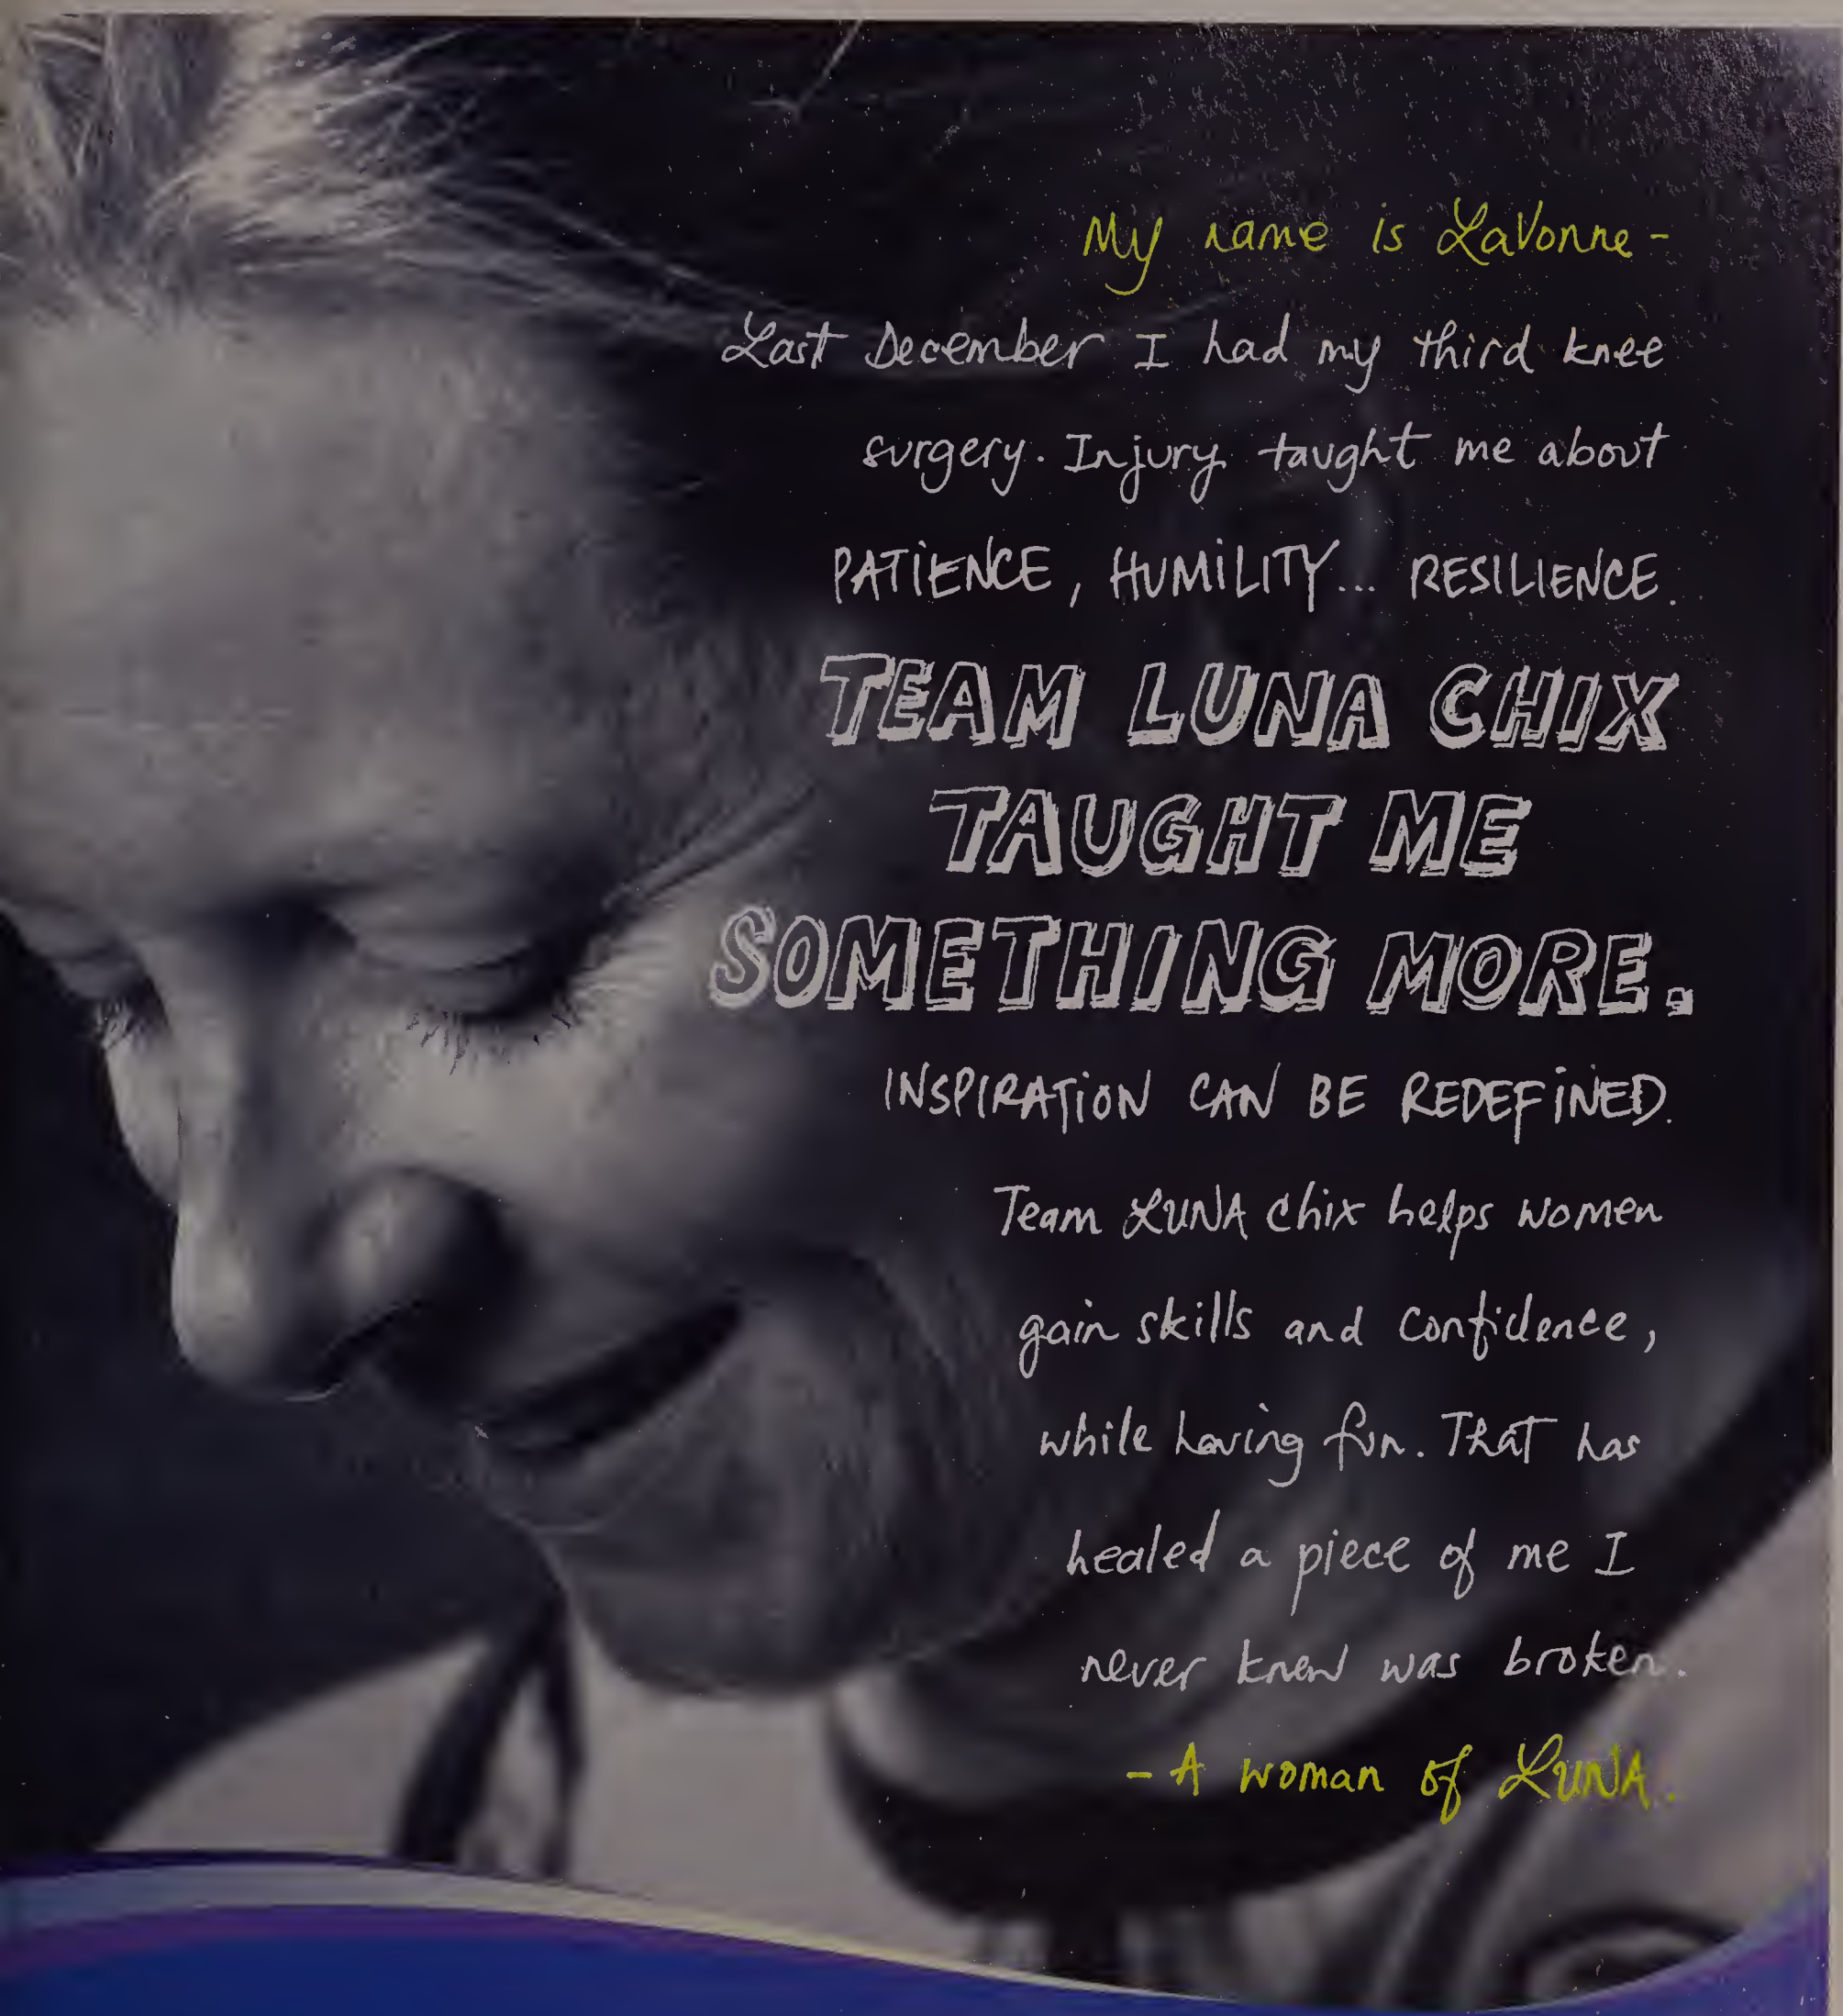
GENTLEMAN CALLING

TO ALL THE MEN ON THE T: Please, hold a door, offer a seat, let women board and exit first. It's so disheartening to see you cutting off others, pushing in front and sitting while a woman stands. Where did the gentlemen go? Ladies, please act accordingly, smile, be warm and polite. It's a cold social world out there.

Ol' fashioned gal



To the manager of a new Mexican restaurant: I have never been more disappointed than I was after eating at your establishment. Typically, when I have a horrible restaurant experience, I let my money do the talking and don't return. This one really takes the cake. There were many bad things—the price, the wait, the inattentive staff—but the worst happened when the busboy threw our appetizer plates into his filthy bucket, dropped it next to our table and walked away. When I called to complain, the manager accused me of making fun of his family and told me that the GM would never hear my grievance. I'm not really sure what that was about, but I can't believe it happened. This place charges about $40 per plate for such absurdly bad service. Someone has to say something!

Completely pissed and out $60

To the blonde in the black Escalade going from Route 1 to the exit near the Public Garden on Storrow Drive: I'm sorry that I didn't know you owned the road. I should have guessed the first time you cut me off, but I didn't get it until the second time within 100 yards. Your driving skills are impressive; I was shocked at how quickly you pulled in front of me—without a turn signal! Your child must be proud to have such a talented mother.

Drink of the Moment

Punch Drunk

Pink, fruity and smackingly sweet, Kingston Station's ↙ PLANTER'S PUNCH ($8) is an ideal nectar for girls' nights and bachelorette parties. Though it boasts heavy helpings of grenadine and pineapple, lime and orange juices, this porch-sipper has a brawny, but nearly undetectable, undercarriage thanks to a double shot of Don Armando 10-Year Rum. (Before the spirit was available in Boston shops, bar manager Eric Pierce picked it up on trips to the Dominican Republic.)

And there's history beneath the cocktail umbrella. "It came from Jamaica to the South in the 1920s and '30s," says Pierce. While recipes pop up in Modern American Drinks (1895), The New York Times (1908), The Savoy Cocktail Book (1930) and Trader Vic's Bartender's Guide (1948), Pierce bases his on a 1937 formula from Famous New Orleans Drinks and How to Mix Them.

It's a classic without hard-and-fast rules, and fans can create their own customized versions from the rhyme, "one of sour, two of sweet, three of strong, four of weak." Eager imbibers should note, though, that there are no Mardi Gras-style punch bowl fountains here. Each portion is made to order, and garnished with a sugar cane swizzle.

Take a Dip

The dip-dye effect is sweeping the land and promises to be the next big hair fad thanks to celebs like Lady Gaga and Lauren Conrad. "This is one of the funkier trends that translates for people of different professions, because they have the ability to pull it up and tuck it away," says Alexandra Craig, stylist at Bradley & Diegel. "The popular colors are neons, which you can combine onto one strand, so you have fuchsia going into purple or blue into green." Unlike an extension, the color flow is seamless, with the ends of your hair prelightened and then dipped into your desired color. Consider it ombré with a bold new twist.

CHEEKY, NOT SAUCY

Faison moves on.

BEFORE THE DOORS OF her first restaurant open, Tiffani Faison may be stirring up a controversy. The chef's definition of "authentic, Southern-style barbecue" includes house-made white bread and biscuits, but no cornbread, sweet or otherwise.

"There's not a big cornbread contingency in the South," says Faison, who plans to open Sweet Cheeks next month in the former Cambridge 1 space in the Fenway.

Authenticity, says Faison, comes from dry-smoked meats such as brisket and pulled pork, with sauce and traditional dishes like black-eyed peas and fried okra on the side. Although smoked pork belly and smoked turkey legs will be offered, don't expect any dishes too far outside the barbecue canon. As she firmly states, "We're not doing tacos."

While awaiting delivery of a 2,600-pound smoker, Faison keeps an eye on Sweet Cheeks' design, which she describes as "welcoming, smart Southern, not too kitschy." Inside, there will be communal seating, while picnic tables will furnish the patio. On the bar side, the restaurant will have something called an "all-American" beverage program, and food and drink will be served until 1 a.m.

With price points ranging from $10 to $20, Faison says that Sweet Cheeks will be "not too cheffy or pretentious." Yet there will be a focus on technique, and she'll have experienced partners in the kitchen, including chef de cuisine Dan Raia, who worked with her at Rocca.

"This is the first thing that has my name on it from top to bottom," says a proud Faison. And speaking of bottom, she's well aware that if you Google Sweet Cheeks, the first site to pop up sells ladies' underwear. With such a sassy name, selling branded merchandise is a given, but she won't venture below hats and T-shirts. "Panties, no," declares Faison. "The panty line is where I draw my line."

DEFY LOGIC

Sometimes irrationality makes perfect sense.

IN A BOOK THAT'S BOTH CHATTY and detailed, Professor Ariely uses experiments to sniff out the paradoxes of rationality and irrationality. For example, a person with $20 is told to split the money with someone else. If the receiving party agrees to the designated split, even if it's unequal, each person gets a share. If the receiver rejects the offer, no one gets any money. Cut off your nose to spite everyone else. Turns out, self-defeating revenge is a powerful force in life and business.

Another surprise is that small or middling rewards given for accomplishing tasks result in better outcomes and productivity than large ones (e.g., the infamous Wall Street bonuses). Ariely also explores the often insalubrious effects that emotions have on decision-making. Actions that stem from old wounds, especially, are undesirable and deserve contemplation.

The Upside of Irrationality
By Dan Ariely

The author taught at MIT.

Ariely, who suffered horrific third-degree burns and years of painful treatment, discusses the choice he had of amputating his arm (he decided against it). It's in this personal crossroads of the rational and irrational, the emotional and the practical, that the book is most vivid. ×××

FROM PAGE 76: "The experiment taught us that sucking the meaning out of work is surprisingly easy. If you're a manager who really wants to demotivate your employees, destroy their work in front of their eyes. Or, if you want to be a little subtler about it, just ignore them and their efforts. On the other hand, if you want to motivate people working with you and for you, it would be useful to pay attention to them, their effort, and the fruits of their labor."

IN THE ZONE

Flavorful food buoys Michael Leviton's latest endeavor.

★★★½☆
Area Four 500 Technology Square, Cambridge
(617-758-4444)

PORTION CONTROL The roasted half chicken delivers with big size and flavor.

FIRST, MY PRECONCEPTIONS: No one, outside of realtors or city planners, actually calls the neighborhood Area Four. Then there was my suspicion that ideas might take precedent over cuisine, a mistake that did no favors to businessman Michael Krupp's and chef Michael Leviton's last venture, the clothier/eatery The Achilles Project/Persephone. Last, the flurry of restaurant openings in the area between Inman, Kendall and Central Squares couldn't help but remind me of a swelling bubble, doomed to burst. So I arrived at Area Four braced for high-concept fatigue. It came as a relief, then, to find the food simple, unpretentious and immediately gratifying.

The 4,200-square-foot space wants to be many things to many people. There are separate areas for a coffee shop, bar and restaurant, the latter equipped with tables on tracks, which can be configured for different groupings. It's a design that evokes a laboratory—more a work-in-progress than an actualization. Despite early buzz, I never saw the place full over several visits. Although the coffee shop does well with sandwiches in the $5 range, it seems not even tech-folk flush with IPO dividends consider $15 pizzas a lunchtime bargain.

Part of the restaurant's character is an open kitchen with two wood-burning ovens cooking up the menu of roasted meats and pizzas. The crisp, flatbread-like dough was especially suited for the savory pepperoni with mozzarella and pecorino ($14). Also enjoyable was the Wellfleet cherry stone clam and bacon ($16), which proved an excellent platform for the local ingredients. None of the pizzas or mains, however, is really as shareable as suggested, unless you order lots of other dishes. And don't expect to blunt your appetite with bread—there are no complimentary carbs.

Vegetarians will have to make do with the starters and salads, since the mains for both lunch and dinner all contain meat. Of the appetizers, the marinated cremini mushrooms were noteworthy for their soy-sesame vinaigrette, which imparted a perfect balance of sweet and tart. The seafood, though, is what shines. Served in a Smuttynose Star Island Single broth, the Maine mussels ($12) didn't taste of beer; instead, the ale complimented the roasted tomatoes and chopped herbs to bring out the mollusks' freshness. My favorite app was the roasted squid salad ($11), a study of how a handful of simple, fresh ingredients can be transformative. Tossed with chickpeas, healthy doses of parsley, preserved lemon rind and black olives, the wonderfully firm squid rings soaked up the tart, salty and slightly bitter flavors of their companion items.

MINI MUSSELS Small plates are tasty, but aptly named.

There isn't much to choose from for a main course. Only two are listed for lunch and three for dinner—one of which, the grass-fed beef and pork hot link ($12), should've been billed as a starter, given its miniscule size. The condiments, a pickle relish and a sweet-and-spicy BBQ mustard, were both more interesting and ample than the dog. The only sizable main was the roast chicken ($19), which came cut up and sizzling over wilted arugula, hunks of bread and cherry tomatoes. With crisp skin and evenly cooked white and dark meat, the chicken's salt-and-pepper seasoning was just right for the simplicity of the dish.

B.N.'s Picks

Clam and bacon pizza

Roasted squid salad

Roasted half chicken

Honey panna cotta

Area Four's unfussy cooking style pairs well with the reasonably priced beer offerings, which include Cambridge's own Pretty Things' Jack D'Or ($4 half-pint; $6 pint). The cocktails, however, tasted light to the point of virginity, so if you're in the mood for liquor, it's best to order straight from the lengthy menu of whiskeys. Also a specialty, at least according to its website and a server, is the restaurant's soft-serve ice cream ($6). While tasty, the conceit isn't unique enough to forgo a scoop from Toscanini's down the street. Instead, get the honey panna cotta, laden with ripe berries and candied pistachios, an ethereal treat to savor with a glass of prosecco or the Bulled gamay ($8 per glass), a sparkling red that should be sold by the gallon.

Despite the trendy name and overambitious concept, I found myself charmed by Area Four. With its laid-back atmosphere, genial service and outdoor seating, if I were a denizen of the neighborhood I wouldn't hesitate to return for after-work drinks or a casual meal. ✖✖✖

SUPREME COURT DECISION

Judge not, Celtics fans, lest ye be judged... by me.

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

SOME PEOPLE CAN LOOK AT a blank canvas and see a beautiful painting. Others can regard an empty lot and envision a towering skyscraper. I have the ability to examine a driveway and decide whether it should be remodeled in the likeness of the TD Garden basketball court. It's just a skill that I have, and everybody knows it. That's why the Celtics asked me to help judge the Re/Max of New England Home Court Program. It sounds like a television show where you convict criminals from the comfort of your own living room, but it's not. (But if it were, it would be hosted by Judge Remus Maximus.)

Home Court is a contest where Celtics fans send in an essay and photos of their busted home basketball hoops. From the 10 finalists, we judges pick three winners. The lucky three get a new driveway court, along with a Celtics-themed bedroom redecoration and a visit from a player. And while the renovations are nowhere near as elaborate as Extreme Makeover: Home Edition, at least the winning fans don't have Ty Pennington following them around, alternately whispering and screaming.

[If Ty Pennington even got near my house, I'd call Billy the Exterminator to get him out. I like the cut of that guy's jib. Speaking of ex-Terminators, I wonder how Arnold is holding up? He's probably hiding in some mountain cabin, just playing cards. You want to know Arnold's favorite card game? Old Maid.]

Like I was saying, my strengths are judging renovation contests and staying on topic. I know a little bit about outdoor hoops because I had a court at my house when I was a kid. My court was dirt, with a wooden backboard nailed roughly nine-and-a-half feet up on the side of a building. In retrospect, it's probably not a great idea to shoot 10,000 shots on a rim that's the wrong height. It's like studying for the bar exam using textbooks written in Esperanto. Hey, I think I just found an excuse for my entire high-school basketball career.

For a hoop, I use a discarded toilet seat. For a backboard, I have a big piece of asbestos.

My fellow judges and I gathered at Celtics headquarters to review the applicants. I'd tell you who the other judges were, but I don't want any jilted contestants to get mad at the entire group. If you want to get mad at someone, get mad at Roger Clemens for dating Casey Anthony. Is that true? I don't really care, as long as you're thinking about Roger Clemens instead of me.

The problem with judging things like this is that you don't want to be mean to anyone. And yet, the rules require you to reject seven of these applicants. So a sort of ruthless calculus emerges. It's not the salad bar at the Olive Garden, people. We don't have unlimited resources.

Everyone's got a different method of narrowing the field. One judge concentrated more on the photos of the applicants' homes than on their stories. "I don't know, that looks like a pretty nice house," he'd say. Then I'd protest that the owner takes care of 15 orphans and his underwear has itchy tags and his dog got sprayed by a skunk, so life is not all peaches. And the other judge would reply, "Yeah, but look at the size of that yard."

In the end, I think we picked three worthy candidates. But all of the finalists were worthy. And that's the problem, whether you're me or Steven Tyler or some other fabulously wealthy and famous person who judges things. So I'd like to give next year's class of applicants some advice on how to get noticed. You want to be earnest, you want a good story, and you want to throw in a little tidbit that shows you're a real fan. Here's an example of an ideal application:

My name is Billy, and I'd like to tell you about my court. For a hoop, I use a discarded toilet seat. For a backboard, I have a big piece of asbestos. I don't have a ball, so I use a squirrel skull that I found in the woods after the mudslide hit our house. But don't feel bad for me; the mudslide put out the fire. So I'm a very lucky girl. Except that I'm named Billy. My dad wanted a boy. That's the last thing he said to me before he went to the store for cigarettes in 2003. I'd take some photos of my court, but right now there are wolves on it. Somebody told me that my court is on a Superfund site, but it doesn't seem super-fun to me. In conclusion, Brian Shaw was underrated. Sincerely, Billy.

To everyone who didn't make the cut, I say try again next year. Just remember that next time, you'll be competing against a canny adversary named "Billy," who might've scored more than six points in high school, if he'd had a better hoop. ✖✖✖

TAKING OFF

Jacoby Ellsbury is hitting his stride.

BACK IN DECEMBER AT THE Nike outlet in Wrentham, Red Sox outfielder Jacoby Ellsbury was launching his new sneaker and apparel line.

Hundreds of people turned out for the occasion. How do I know? Because I was there as the emcee. It was an interesting event to observe. Ladies have always loved Ellsbury, and they made their feelings known, but recently, the male division of Red Sox Nation had questioned his testicular fortitude.

The 2010 season was a forgettable one for Ellsbury. He played in only 16 games, and in his absence, the Red Sox struggled to find a suitable replacement both in the outfield and at the leadoff spot.

As I conducted the Q-and-A segment of the event, I brought up the fact that, after he arrived from the minors in 2007 and supplanted a struggling Coco Crisp, Ellsbury hit over .400—Ted Williams territory—in the World Series. "It was .438," he quickly corrected. The crowd went crazy. Score one for the kid in center field.

What I learned that day is that the 27-year-old holds an absolute belief in his abilities, and right now that confidence is sky-high. He knows he can consistently be that clutch performer we saw in the World Series, not the player whose toughness was questioned throughout last season.

Ellsbury has a great story. Despite being a first-round pick with All-American looks, he hasn't always had it easy. He grew up on an Indian reservation in Oregon, with his family living day-to-day, paycheck-to-paycheck.

As for his physical toughness, legend has it that the former Division I football prospect once played a game with a broken arm, and the opposing team never had a clue. It seems ridiculous now that after last season's rib-cracking collision with Adrian Beltre, the gossip—in and out of the clubhouse—about Ellsbury's inability to play through pain actually picked up steam as the year went on.

Ellsbury tried to defend himself in an ill-advised press conference, where his unease at the microphone and stilted prepared statement didn't do him any favors. His agent, the legendary hard-ass Scott Boras, should have been fired for dragging his client out to the wolves of the Boston media, and his decision to stay away from the team during the majority of his time on the disabled list sent the wrong message. These were all regrettable moments, but should they have stained the young star as "soft" or "mentally weak"? No.

I have to admit, even as a big Ellsbury fan, I wondered last year if the excitement he brought to the ballpark was the exception rather than the rule. I thought that, perhaps, my expectations had risen too high. I played baseball. I respect guys that can run; and I have never seen a guy with that level of speed. One of my Peabody boys, Matt Antonelli, was a first-round pick for the San Diego Padres in 2006. He's incredibly quick. My source (Matt's dad, Jack) told me Antonelli and Ellsbury raced each other in 2003 when they both played for Falmouth in the Cape Cod League. Apparently, Ellsbury came out on top. I could hardly believe it at first, but that's when I knew that the future Sox All-Star possessed otherworldly speed.

Ellsbury wowed me again in the 2007 World Series, when I saw he had the defensive and hitting abilities to match his velocity. Now I look at him differently. He isn't simply a jackrabbit who gets on base for the big fellas. He's a legitimate MVP candidate.

The Sox signed Ellsbury to a one-year arbitration contract worth $2.4 million, which is a bargain beyond belief. He's under the organization's thumb until 2013, but general manager Theo Epstein and company have some work to do if they want to ink Ellsbury to a long-term deal. The organization wasn't too nice to him during his struggles, and that may come back to haunt them.

If Carl Crawford is worth $20 million per year—and that's up for debate—how much is Ellsbury worth? He's proven much more productive than Crawford this season, so, with his statistics and his evil agent by his side, an even larger contract isn't out of the question.

It would be a shame to lose Ellsbury just as he's finally reaching the heights of his potential. He belongs here for the long haul. Remember, finding guys who can handle playing in Boston isn't an easy venture. Will he let bygones be bygones? Will he forgive the doubters, a group that includes some of his teammates?

My guess is yes, for about $100 million. ✖✖✖

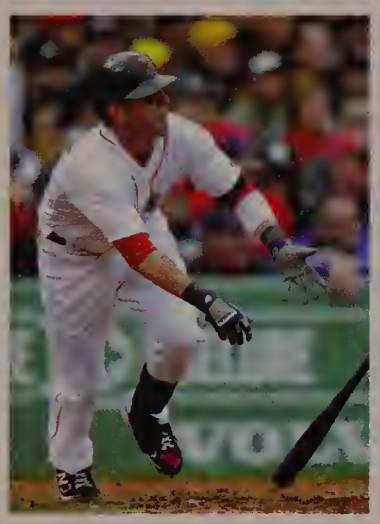
TAKE 5



The School of Sports { RICH LEVINE }

HELLO, FOOTBALL. NICE TO SEE YOU AGAIN.

3 SOX THOUGHTS

Breaking Clay I feel like cursing out the Sox medical staff for not taking better care of Clay Buchholz, but I'm not sure what that would accomplish. Instead, I'll just sit here and scheme until I think of a way to even the score.

"I Had the Green Light!" A few issues ago, I suggested there might be something wrong with Dustin Pedroia. In retrospect, this was among the funniest things I've ever written. Hope you had a good laugh, and hope you've enjoyed the return of the old Pedey. Now if we can just get them to stop playing that effing Dunkin' Donuts commercial.

From the Oval Office I've gone to the mattresses for Carl Crawford all season, and all I've got to show for it is a bad back and bed bugs. With that, I hereby surrender my presidency of the Carl Crawford Fan Club. That doesn't mean I don't think he can still contribute, but it won't be in the way we imagined. Even if it's just for this year, Crawford's not the same guy.

CATCH ON Ochocinco will fit right in this season.

5 ON THE PATS GRAND RETURN

Weak Sauce After four months of raging animosity, I'm a little ashamed of how easily I forgave the NFL. Not that I anticipated a season-long grudge, but I thought, "Eh, I'll stay mad for at least a week." Nope. Ocho and Albert signed, and I was back. The lockout never happened. (Except for DeMaurice Smith's hats. Those images are forever.)

Was It the Chad? I'm excited for the Ochocinco era. He's not the deep threat of five years ago, but he's still solid. And while I know Ocho can be a pain, he and Belichick are actual friends. It's hard to imagine they'd consummate this marriage before discussing every potential issue. For instance, should Ocho celebrate his first TD by kissing a cheerleader, or spanking a musket guy?

Fat Albert I also like the Haynesworth move, but I'm not nearly as confident. I do believe he deserves one last chance. But... I don't know. You couldn't make up half the stuff on this guy's rap sheet. For now, I'll jump on the bandwagon but keep one finger on the ejection button (the one I installed after the John Lackey signing).

Corner's Back Overlooked among the big-name acquisitions is the return of Leigh Bodden. He was the Pats' most reliable corner in 2009, and was rewarded with a four-year extension before a shoulder injury derailed his 2010 season. But now Bodden's back, and with a new Pro Bowl sidekick in the secondary. Actually, at this point, Bodden's the sidekick, and a damn good one.

Bye-bye, Ty For me, the most startling aspect of Ty Warren's release was how little it affected me. I've got nothing but respect for Warren and appreciate all he did for this team, but after the departures of guys like Richard Seymour, Mike Vrabel and Willie McGinest? Nothing's going to shock me. No one's here forever. (Except for Tom Brady. He's never leaving. Ever!)

4 DATES TO WATCH

8/11: "Are you ready for some football?!?!" is what the guy next to you will yell 15 times before you slap him. Pats host the Jags in Week 1 of the preseason.

8/12: One Celtic (Satch Sanders) and one cross-dresser (Dennis Rodman) are among those inducted into the Naismith Basketball Hall of Fame.

8/14: It's Sunday at the PGA Championship, and now that Tiger's rid himself of the ruthless Steve Williams, there's nothing standing between him and that elusive 15th Major.

8/15: The Sox host a doubleheader against the Rays. In the words of JD Drew, "Let's play one!"

2 OFFSEASON THREADS

The NBA Ban Is On From now until the end of the lockout, I'm not talking about the NBA. You know how much that pains me, but talking about the lockout pains me more. Stern's gone bonkers, the players don't care yet, and it's not ending anytime soon. Until then... Good day to you, sirs (and Violet Palmer).

In Other Words Get ready for a bunch more hockey talk! Or as much as I can muster before revealing myself as a total fraud. Anyway, here's my question: Do you think Brad Marchand had sex in the Stanley Cup? I'm going to say yes. At the very least, on top of it.

1 ONE TEMPORARY GOODBYE

I know Randy Moss filed retirement papers with the league, but I'm not buying it. At this point, I don't buy any superstar retirement the first time around, but especially in Moss' case—he'll be back, and playing for a contender. Or my name's not Woody from Nashville.

"The Mongolian death worm's not something you hear people mention every day."

Soroff On PATRICK SPAIN

The TV host and naturalist tells us about bullet ants, North American primates and crazy giant squid.

PATRICK SPAIN, 31, is the host of the National Geographic show Beast Hunter, on which he travels to far-flung corners of the globe trying to prove or debunk the existence of mythical creatures. Spain attended Suffolk University before working in the laboratories at Genzyme, where he's still employed. As well as bearing the scars from a lifetime of collecting venomous snakes, he's been bitten by everything from a bear to a rabid raccoon. His intrepidity landed him appearances on the Animal Planet show King of the Jungle II, which led eventually to Beast Hunter. Spain is currently battling colon cancer.

Jonathan Soroff: Which do you prefer, lab work or field work?
Patrick Spain: Field work. I would spend my entire life covered in estuarian mud, covered in bites from snakes and up to my neck in jungle grass.

Do the people at Genzyme enjoy your TV gig?
They think I'm nuts, but so do most people I talk to. Seriously, they've been so supportive, absolutely amazing about encouraging me and giving me the time off and actually even promoting it.

Do you spend all of your free time chasing critters?
Absolutely. It's an obsession. It drives my girlfriend nuts, but she likes to go out there with me every once in a while. She's into the cuter animals.

Favorite mythical creature?
The giant squid is the animal that got me into marine biology and cryptozoology. It's the scariest, craziest thing—60 feet long, potentially. And until less than a hundred years ago, they thought it was a myth.

Thing you'd most like to prove exists?
A sea serpent. We were up in Canada, looking for Caddy, this mythical sea-creature off the coast of Vancouver. We know so little about the deep oceans. Even the most conservative scientists estimate that there are between six and 15 large species left to be discovered in the ocean.

Most interesting human culture you've seen?
I loved the tribe in Brazil that I did the bullet-ant ritual with. If you want to be a hunter, you've got to go through this extreme ritual that requires you to be stung hundreds of times by these two-inch-long ants that have the most painful sting in the animal kingdom. You start hallucinating. It was a solid 24 hours of the worst pain I've ever experienced.

Most poisonous thing you've been bitten by?
A neotropical rattlesnake. That's why I'll never free-handle venomous snakes again.

Scariest snake?
Black mambas. Most snakes can't get away from you fast enough, but mambas don't do that. They come after you.

Is your show about folklore as well as science?
Absolutely. If you think about it, so many of the large animals we're now familiar with started out as folklore. One of the best quotes I've heard was from our guide in Sumatra, who said, "The people who don't believe in this animal have never been to my forest."

Weirdest creature you've ever heard of?
The Mongolian death worm's not something you hear people mention every day.

So who's your fan base?
I expected it to be guys in their teens to mid-30s, but what I've found, thanks to Facebook, is that it's more sort of teenaged Indonesian girls. [Laughs.]

Most unlikely creature out there?
Probably those giant worms that live at the vents on the deep ocean floor in an environment that changes thousands of degrees in a matter of feet, and they seem to neither consume nutrients nor give off waste. The deep-sea animals sort of defy everything we know about biology.

Yes or no: Sasquatch?
Undecided. I know that's a cop-out, but I've talked to people who aren't crazy, and know bears and all the other animals, and still maintain that they saw something. It's strange to me that North America only has one primate species, humans, while every other continent has multiple.

Loch Ness monster?
Definitely not. You've got a relatively small area. It's landlocked. I know there are some supposed tunnels that lead out to the ocean, but the conditions aren't right to be supporting this very large animal.

Favorite locale?
I absolutely loved shooting in Brazil. The food was incredible. Fresh fish from the Amazon every day. One of the truly wild places left on earth. We were in places that were borderlands with uncontacted tribes.

Best perk of the job?
Even if you could afford to travel to these places, which I never could, you wouldn't have the access to participating in the rituals, meeting these people, without the weight of National Geographic behind you.

Do you credit the show with having your cancer detected early?
Absolutely. I got really sick in Sumatra, and when I got back, the doctors were like, "Yeah, you've got some tropical disease." But I kept feeling sick, and they diagnosed me with everything you can think of. If it weren't for the show, I probably would have just written it off.

Do you hunt?
No. I was a vegetarian most of my life and only started eating meat fairly recently because the doctors told me to. I respect hunters. But personally, it would be pretty tough for me.

Favorite hoax?
This guy De Loys took a photo of this supposedly new ape species, but some people say he just mutilated a gibbon and then manipulated it to seem larger. But I also love stuff like the classic photo of the Loch Ness monster that everybody accepted as real, but on his deathbed, the guy who took it admitted to using a toy model and a plastic castle. ✕✕✕

Our annual round-up of the city's rising musical stars.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

▶ A LOT HAPPENS ON THE LOCAL ROCK SCENE IN A YEAR. BANDS RELOCATE, CHANGE MEMBERS OR DISSOLVE. OTHERS SOLDIER ON, BUILD MOMENTUM AND SCORE COUPS. OUR ANNUAL LIST OF BUZZWORTHY ACTS SALUTES THOSE WHO STAY THE COURSE.

Kingsley Flood

Before joining the roots-rock ranks, Naseem Khuri was a Harvard grad with a Masters in public policy and a sense of disillusionment with office life. "I basically wanted a more human connection," says the singer/guitarist. "There's nothing better than actually connecting with people in a small sweaty club on a Saturday night."

He's been doing plenty of that with Kingsley Flood, which has solidified its lineup since its 2010 debut, Dust Windows, even with Khuri's pre-album move to Washington D.C. On guitar, George Hall's woolly solos contrast with Chris Barrett's trumpet and Jenée Morgan's violin and sax riffs.

WBZ-TV featured the band's song "Cul de Sac" (with its line "I've got my thumb on the pulse of a nation") for a promotional campaign. Now Kingsley Flood is ready to break out with "I Don't Wanna Go Home," the buoyant first single from an upcoming album that should translate the anthemic energy of their live sets.

The band often gets tagged as Americana, but Khuri cites the Clash and Bruce Springsteen as main influences, both for their musical and social impact. "There's a generation of people who grew up thinking music could create change and actually define behavior," he says. "I drink the Kool-Aid on that stuff." KINGSLEYFLOOD.COM

Dirty Dishes

Jenny Tuite dislikes clubs. She doesn't even like being a front woman. "I find it really strange how making music somehow got combined with going to clubs," the singer/guitarist says. "It's weird that people who make music and are more introverted are expected to want to be in this environment."

But she's getting used to the scene with Dirty Dishes, her Berklee-groomed band whose psychedelia is influenced by the Smashing Pumpkins and My Bloody Valentine. "I was really shy," she says. "When I started this band, I was still surprised people would want to play with me or have faith in my music."

Her songs evolve from loose jamming, and they can end up jumping from ambient atmospherics to art-rock. "It's kind of born from spontaneity without inhibitions," she says. "But when we're deciding what parts to keep or how to record it, we're very meticulous."

Guitar/synth player Alex Molini and bassist Jay Marcovitz flesh out the din, while interim drummer Zack Fierman of King Orchid holds down the changes until the young group settles on its next timekeeper. Tuite centers it all with skeletal picking and spectral vocals. But she's just not one to thrive on audience interaction.

"I like to play with my eyes closed or look down," says Tuite, who's sporting protective bangs of late. "My roommate works at a hair salon, so I'm her guinea pig... It's cool to hide from people." MYSPACE.COM/THEDIRTYDISHESMUSIC

"I like to play with my eyes closed."

"It's been really wild."

Dom

Central Mass. slackers Dom had barely scratched the local club scene before they snagged a major record deal and toured the world this past year. "It's been really wild," says singer/guitarist Dom, who claims he eschews his last name to avoid creditors. "I never imagined that I would play the Sydney Opera House on acid."

For a foster kid who spent his teens bouncing between homes, it's a long way to have come. "It's kind of surreal, like I died and went to heaven," says Dom, who grew from selling homemade beats from his computer to captivating the blogosphere with his psych-garage pop band.

The band's debut EP, Sun Bronzed Greek Gods, spawned cheap, synth-kissed ditties, like the lifestyle send-up "Living In America." And the new EP, Family of Love, rides the same chill wave, though Dom's particularly high on his "cosmic" remixes. For "Telephone," he was going for "Mariah Carey teeny-bop with weird sensory parts, little insinuations of being dark."

He'll continue that direction with drummer Bobby, bassist Erik and keyboardist Ming Ming. And they'll be free agents next May. Says Dom, "As an artist, the biggest struggle is being understood. Money is important, but it's more [important] having control over everything." MYSPACE.COM/DOM

Guillermo Sexo

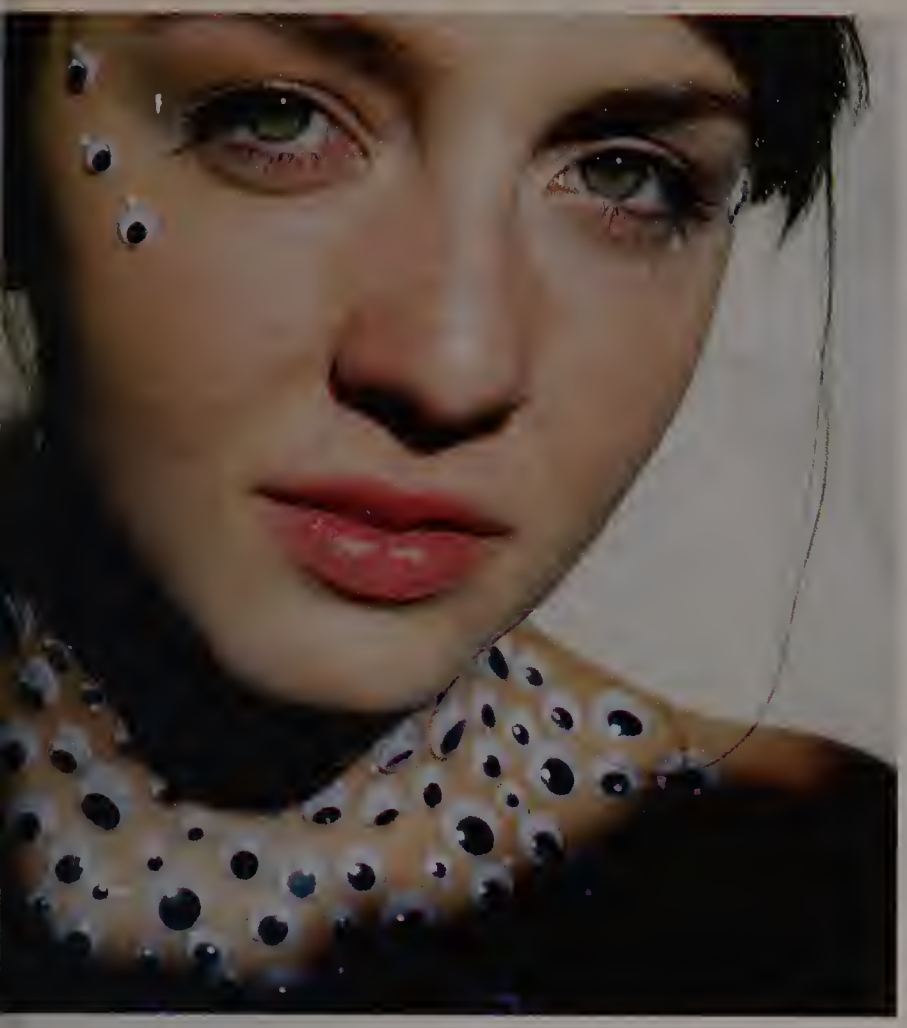
One of the problems with prog rock is length. Looking to curtail the marathon songs of his outfit the National Blue, Reuben Bettsak launched Guillermo Sexo as a chance to work on a smaller scale. "It was more beat-based, like combining psychedelic rock with Latin rhythms," says the guitarist, who, in a nod to the Panamanian side of his family, sang some songs in Spanish on the band's debut.

Today he's the only original member of Sexo, which sports influences from punk, '90s shoegazer rock, '60s English folk and avant-garde classical. Even so, "I feel like I'm doing a lot better at not throwing everything out there," Bettsak says. "Maybe because I'm kind of A.D.D., I get bored staying too much within guidelines." Secret Wild, the band's fourth album, combines disparate elements like dreamy acoustic strums, slamming postpunk and singer/keyboardist Noell Dorsey's haunting warble.

Yet Sexo spins a surprisingly cohesive blend, even with strong musical personalities. Elliott Anderson can throttle his Fender bass. At a recent gig, new drummer Ryan Connelly (from the spacey Americana combo Mount Peru) wove tribal drums into the mix with the departing Jay Weixelbaum. Transitions are par for the course, and, as Bettsak says, "It still feels like we're gaining momentum." GUILLERMOSEXO.BANDCAMP.COM

Sea Monsters

They've never had a rehearsal, but that's not a problem for what singer/guitarist Christian McNeill calls his "eight-headed monster" of the city's top musicians. "There's nothing like a residency of three years to whittle a band into shape," he says of Sea Monsters' fabled Sunday night run at Precinct.



Now Sea Monsters are primed to play shows this fall and next year to promote their debut LP. It's shaping up to be a killer trad-rock–R&B album in the vein of Van Morrison, who the Irish-born McNeill saw perform at age 10. "I remember looking onstage and seeing the backing singers and the horn section and the keys and thinking, 'That's what I want someday.'"

> "We had to start taking it seriously because it was too good not to."

The advance single "Zero" already stands apart, with McNeill snarling over beefy electric chords reminiscent of '80s-era Pete Townshend lifted by Scott and John Aruda's powerful horns.

"It's one of those songs that literally wrote itself," says McNeill, who once fronted Hybrasil and Orchestra Morphine. The lyrics came from when he hit bottom, before quitting drugs four years ago. "I realized I wasn't going to do that to my body and my brain anymore... 'Zero' was looking back at that period, and I wrote it in 10 minutes. I was singing about me."

Sea Monsters "was never supposed to be a serious thing," having been born out of loose sessions with guests like Dwight & Nicole, Tim Gearan and Duke Levine. Says McNeill, "We had to start taking it more seriously because it was too good not to." SEAMONSTERSMUSIC.COM

Julia Easterlin

First she pats her chest. Then she snaps her fingers. Next, she's cooing harmonies. It all plays back in layers when Julia Easterlin finally sings the words to "Go Straight Away," and the moment draws audible joy from audiences at her one-woman show.

It was the first song that Easterlin wrote after buying a looping station as a high-school senior, not knowing that she'd someday be singing it at Lollapalooza.

"I couldn't really dig into singing or playing an instrument when I was doing both simultaneously," says the Berklee graduate. "I wanted to use my voice to its full potential, and thought a loop station would be the way to do that."

Easterlin has a talent for imitating electronic sounds with her vocal chords and for reimagining songs by Björk and the Pixies, which she transforms into tunes unrecognizable from the originals. She writes in symmetrical patterns to build a recorded, ethereal choir in synch with the loop cycles. "It's like musical geometry that just sits in my head like this puzzle on a grid," she explains.

This summer, Easterlin has been working with two drummers and a bassist to play Lollapalooza, though she prefers going solo in smaller venues. "What's happening now is my wildest dream come true."

JULIAEASTERLIN.COM

Moe Pope

The brawl started when a Pearl Jam CD chanced to slip out of his book bag, prompting mockery from the biggest kid in school. So Moe Pope took a swing. "I thoroughly got beat up, but I fought for my music," he says. "It made me who I am today."

Pope later embraced hip-hop but never lost a broad vision of music, which has become a filter for his rap projects. His 2010 album Life After God name-dropped George Harrison and Kurt Cobain alongside references to Rakim and Kanye West. Pope then tapped producers Headnodic and Rain to remix the album with Depeche Mode samples to create the free download Depeche Moe. (In a similar spirit, Pope used Björk songs to remix his previous record, Megaphone, as MegaBjork).

The only constant between Life After God and Depeche Moe is the lyrics, which touch on relationships and drug use. "I talk about my stumbles," Pope says. "I have to put some real life in it."

Now the Vans Warped Tour veteran is invigorating live hip-hop with his band, Quills, which has rocked the jam-electronica festival Camp Bisco. "We don't see ourselves as a hip-hop group," says Pope, who plays guitar on a sample-free Quills album due to drop this fall. "I'd rather just play music."

Onstage, DJ/drummer Rain and keyboardist Michael McCarthy mix beats and textures while Pope unleashes a torrent of words with fellow MC Christopher Talkin, altering the tone and tempo of his voice as he lurches and weaves.

"I don't know where I get it," Pope says. "I was a pretty quiet kid growing up." MOEPOPE.TUMBLR.COM

John Powhida International Airport

In 2006, John Powhida and his band the Rudds came in second at the Rock 'n' Roll Rumble. Explaining his victory in this year's competition, the self-deprecating veteran says, "Maybe it's the experience vote, maybe it's a pity thing." Either way, he gladly accepted the 2011 crown with his broader, darker and flat-out entertaining John Powhida International Airport. "I know the press and people say, 'He won for his showmanship,' and stuff like that. But I'll put my songs up against anyone's."

Sure, the Albany native knows how to craft an engaging number, be it about an offbeat topic like jailbirds or the late jazz bassist Jaco Pastorius. And he often prefaces his songs with an anecdote. He credits his creativity to his day job at the Museum of Fine Arts. "As a gallery guard, I've got nothing but time," he says. "I can think about songs and lyrics and banter."

International Airport grew from gratis recording sessions with local Pixies and Radiohead producer Paul Kolderie. (The resulting album is now sold as a download on Powhida's website.) "I have no grand plan," the singer says, musing on whether he could still become a local legend like Rick Berlin, Asa Brebner or Little Joe Cook. "When I'm 70, someone will say, 'What's with this guy?' and maybe put out a retrospective," he says. "There's hope."

Walter Sickert & the Army of Broken Toys

Infidelity has its bright side. When their spouses ran off with each other, Walter Sickert and art-scene associate Edrie Edrie found solace in steamcrunk music.

"It's either become an artist or a serial killer, and I've always thought the artist is a better choice," says singer/guitarist Sickert, who channeled his dark emotions into songs that he shared with Edrie, sowing seeds for the Army of Broken Toys.

"People that joined the band are sort of outsiders in their own field," Edrie says of the vaudevillian octet, whose members play instruments that include viola, ukulele, clarinet and stand-up bass. For her part, Edrie plays the accordion as well as toys like a boxed glockenspiel and a cymbal-clapping monkey.

A performance troupe called the Bunny Collaborative packs the audience with fire-eaters, human marionettes and burlesque dancers. "I'm constantly on-stage going 'Whoa!' myself," Edrie says. "I never know what's going to happen."

Sickert, who evokes Dr. John the Night Tripper with his feathered top hat, views the music as a complement to his twisted work as a visual artist: "If you're going to come out to a show, it should be an art exhibit/carnival rather than people standing around."

Unsurprisingly, the band's weekly rehearsals can get as crazy as their shows. "It's constant chaos," Edrie says. "Basically it's like a big family dinner where we end up with music as the dessert."

Lady Lamb the Beekeeper

When Aly Spaltro performs as Lady Lamb the Beekeeper, her songs of heartbreak seem so raw and exposed that it's as if she's pulling at nerve endings. "People can see honesty," she says. "It's definitely a vulnerable position to put yourself in, and at times it's really rough. But mostly it's liberating."

The Maine native, whose stage moniker came to her in a dream, grew up on the Beatles and Motown before she found catharsis in poetry as a teenager, soaking in the styles of Allen Ginsberg, Saul Williams and the band Neutral Milk Hotel.

"It taught me you could have a spoken-word feel to lyrics or have sprawling, very wordy poems and put them to music," Spaltro says. But wordiness doesn't preclude emotion. "The way that I sing, the quiet-to-loud buildup honestly didn't come from any musical influence. It just came from being really angry."

She's worked with other musicians but feels most comfortable as a solo act, focusing on electric guitar. "I love the way it sounds and playing with distortion, and I didn't want to be pigeonholed as a female singer/songwriter or folk artist," says Spaltro, who nonetheless won a 2010 Boston Music Award as Folk Artist of the Year.

As she contemplates a follow-up to her fifth homemade album, Mammoth Swoon, (and the free download of a recent Brighton Music Hall show on her website), Spaltro has one clear idea about her next project: "I don't want to lose any soul and rawness that my live show has." LADYLAMBTHEBEEKEEPER.COM

This bliss

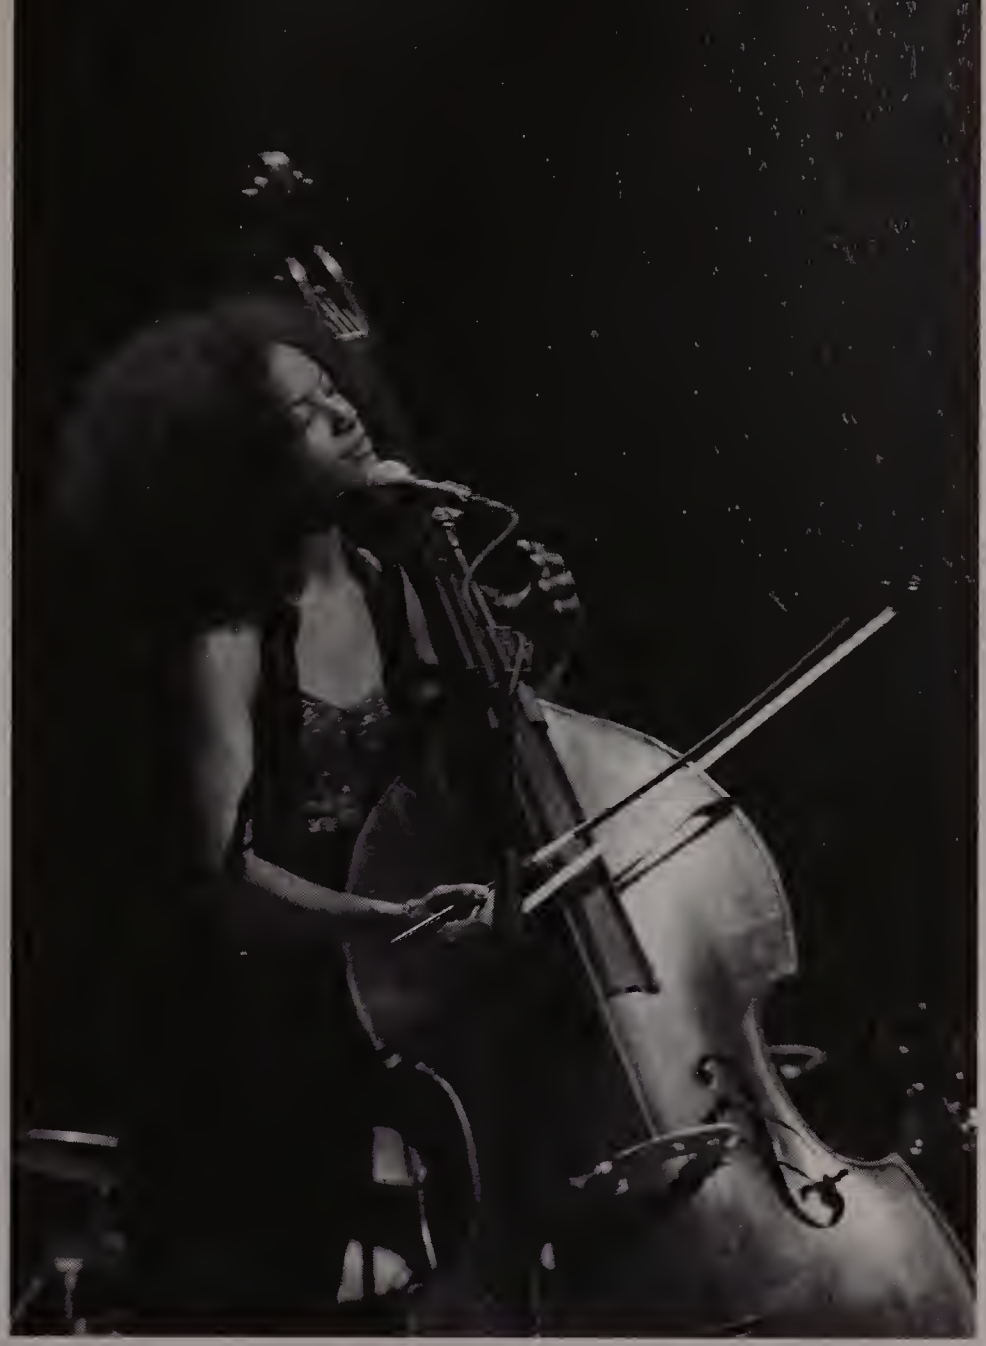
Esperanza Spalding shocked the music world this year when she became the first jazz act to win the Grammy Award for Best New Artist. To do that, the bassist/singer/composer outpaced a pop-heavy field that included the favored Drake, Justin Bieber, Mumford & Sons, and Florence + the Machine. Frustrated beliebers flamed Spalding on Twitter and hacked her Wikipedia page.

But the Berklee-trained wunderkind doesn't give the backlash any thought. "That's not the crew I roll with," says Spalding, 26. "Jazz musicians talk mess about me, too. That's OK. There are enough people in my camp, and we learn from each other."



Those people aren't limited to jazz luminaries like Joe Lovano and McCoy Tyner, who featured Spalding in their bands. President Obama asked the rising star to perform both at the White House and at his Nobel Peace Prize ceremony in Oslo. She's also charmed pop royalty, performing with Stevie Wonder and Prince, who tapped Spalding to open concerts and play in private jam sessions.

Those meetings go back to New Year's Eve 2008, when Spalding and drummer John Blackwell jammed for hours in Prince's L.A. basement. "He'll invite people over to his house just to hang and play and ask them what they're into, to learn and to share— that's the nature of our friendship," she says. "His prowess on all the instruments is really mind-blowing, and just his musicality... Every bone in his body is screaming to make music at all times."

That sounds a lot like the ever-busy Spalding. "That's what we do, yes," she says from her New York apartment. "It always feels like there's never enough time to explore everything."

"SHE'S A 'global' musician IN THE TRUEST SENSE OF THE WORD."

For this year's Newport Jazz Festival, Spalding was given carte blanche to play with whomever she wanted. The pool included performers like Anat Cohen, Uri Caine and her longtime accomplices Leo Genovese and Terri Lyne Carrington. But recently, Spalding's spent her days in the studio, finishing her next album, Radio Music Society, for release in February. A contrast to last year's graceful Chamber Music Society, which nodded to her orchestral grounding, the new record promises a more contemporary sound, with songs formatted so, as Spalding explains, "they could be on the radio." She's brought in hip-hop guru Q-Tip to produce the album, recording potential tracks with jazz associates Lovano, Carrington, Jack DeJohnette, Billy Hart, Lionel Loueke and Lalah Hathaway.

"I'm stretching my capacity in making this record," Spalding says. "I'm not sure how the hell it's all going to sound when I'm done, but I like what I hear so far."

The dexterous Spalding thrives on exploring new territory. Consider how much she's grown since her 2008 major-label debut, Esperanza, a Brazilian-slanted album that ruled the contemporary jazz charts. It was a breezy, eclectic showcase of her talents as a bassist and vocalist (singing in Portuguese and Spanish as well as English), but it fell short of establishing an original identity. Chamber Music Society showed more sophistication and vision, opening with "Little Fly," an existential William Blake poem gently set to strings and dreamy vocals.

"She reads a lot and studies a lot, not just music but life in general, and you have to be a well-rounded person in life to be a great artist," says Berklee professor Carrington, who played drums on both of Spalding's Music Society projects. "She's a constant student. She's not resting on what she already knows—and she knows a lot—and she knows she has so much to learn."

"I'm not sure HOW THE HELL IT'S ALL GOING TO SOUND when I'm done, but I like what I hear."

Carrington, herself a onetime Berklee prodigy who toured with jazz greats Herbie Hancock and Wayne Shorter, says that Spalding shows her originality as a "triple threat" at bass, vocals and composition. It's an unusual combination.

"She studied classical music as well as jazz, and she's also a product of the hip-hop generation," Carrington says. "She's a 'global' musician in the truest sense of that word. Her ethnicity is mixed-up, and she's musically all mixed-up, too."

Born of African-American, Hispanic, Welsh and Native American heritage, Spalding and her brother were raised by their single mother in a depressed neighborhood of Portland, Oregon. There were drugs, gangs and guns. At one point, after a neighbor was killed by a stray bullet, Spalding slept on the floor.

"There are places much worse," she says. "The circumstances were weird and could have been dangerous, but even now, looking back in context, I realize what an amazing upbringing I had."

Largely homeschooled because of a lengthy illness and an intuitive learning style that didn't thrive in the classroom, Spalding took to music early, playing piano. At age four she picked up the violin after seeing Yo-Yo Ma perform on Mister Rogers' Neighborhood; this led to a decade-long role in a community orchestra called the Chamber Music Society of Oregon. She was the concertmaster by age 15 and earned a scholarship to the music program at Portland State University, playing clarinet, oboe and guitar as well as violin and piano. But it was only when she took up the acoustic bass that she truly fell in love.

"Classical music was always part of my life, and songs on the radio, and songs that weren't on the radio that my friends gave me—you know how musicians are," she says. "Osmosis is a big part of who I am musically. It's hard for me to identify all the sources. When I love something, be it Hermeto Pascoal, Becca Stevens or Jimi Hendrix, I listen to it all the time."

Spalding has a crammed iPod, of course, but apart from her love for YouTube (she gushes about Weather Report bassist Jaco Pastorius singing "Birdland" on The Midnight Special), her peers' technologic pastimes baffle her. "It impresses me that people get as much done as they do and still have time to watch TV and tweet and do e-mails," Spalding says. "I'm amazed. I can't do it."

When she's not in the studio or on tour, she practices acoustic bass in the morning ("my neighbors are gone") and composes at night. "Airplanes are the place for [writing] lyrics, of course, and for content and language, reading is important."

Spalding credits her management for giving her the space to do what she wants. "Young people need to make mistakes and explore and try new things," she says. And new is what her music's all about. "Maybe this year it sounds like pop, and in five years, it'll sound completely different." ***

STYLE PROFILE / by Amanda Knorr

"When I was in a punk-rock band in the '90s, we played at a church in Canton and someone left this hat."

"Growing up, I wanted brand names like all the other kids, but I couldn't afford them. So when I was in high school my goal was to wear the ugliest clothes. Like plaid on plaid. Ugly chic is how I'd describe it."

"I'm a huge comedy nerd, so I think maybe subconsciously I tend to dress with a nod to the early SNL days... sort of '70s rugged urban but without all the cocaine."

"I do tours of the Freedom Trail, so I wear the Colonial outfit. It's extremely hot. A lot of people take off the jacket, but I don't. Back in the day a true gentleman wouldn't leave the house without his jacket."

Tune In

ON A SUNNY NOTE

MAYOR MENINO shined a spotlight on Boston's seaport when he dubbed it the "Innovation District" back in his 2010 inaugural address. A few construction projects later, we're still watching the place evolve. Creativity continues to develop alongside all the new upscale eateries: Every Thursday in August, you can meander over to the South Boston Maritime Park for a free midday concert. The second annual Music in the Park series showcases acts like Code 51 and Ray Cavicchio, adding a little something extra to that mundane mid-morning recess. Lunch-breakers take note: eavesdropping is free.

ALIA GILBERT

Music in the Park takes place Thursdays from 11:30 am-1:30 pm at the South Boston Maritime Park.

Capsules by Sean Burns

Bad Teacher ★ ½ Cameron Diaz gives it her all as a slutty, gold-digging English teacher fond of snoozing through class with a hangover. Embezzling school funds for a boob-job she hopes will impress her dorky sugar daddy–to-be, Justin Timberlake, she smokes weed, struts and generally tries way too hard in this depressingly inert effort. Directed by Jake Kasdan, the film lurches from one under-realized set-piece to the next, setting up jokes that never pay off and stranding a talented ensemble in a vortex of missed opportunities. Most of the actors wind up drenched in flop-sweat, throwing themselves into caricatured performances that clash with the banal surroundings and under-developed screenplay. The movie looks awfully cheap, and it's edited in such a way that allows failed jokes to hang in the air for eternity. Credit Jason Segel, who breezes into the proceedings as a happy, horny gym teacher, off-handedly dropping one-liners while everyone around him plays to the rafters. (In the suburbs.)

Buck ★★★ Though we never see Buck Brannaman actually whisper to a horse, his folksy drawl is so soothing it's no surprise he was the inspiration for Nicholas Evans' novel The Horse Whisperer and informed Robert Redford's performance in the 1998 film. His training favors positive reinforcement and benefits from an almost supernatural patience. Brannaman exudes empathy for these animals with his "gentle and firm" mantra. Looking a bit like Anderson Cooper without the harsh angles, the film's subject carries himself with a laconic calm that's compulsively watchable, even when it starts to feel like there's nothing in life that cannot be boiled down to an equestrian metaphor. He's good company. Clearly enraptured, director Cindy Meehl follows Brannaman on the road for a stretch, overindulging in panoramic Western vistas that test the limits of digital photography. Buck's secret weapon arrives when we become privy to Brannaman's troubled past. There's something deeply moving about watching a man transcend his tragic childhood and use the hard lessons he's learned for the good of others. (At West Newton Cinema.)

Cowboys & Aliens ★ ½ I just had to travel back in time to break the news to my nine-year-old self that James Bond and Indiana Jones teaming up to fight space-lizards in the Old West isn't the awesomest movie in the history of the world. Boasting five credited screenwriters, a raft of story-by credits and bearing little resemblance to the comic book from which it takes its title, director John Favreau's misjudged genre-bender treats a schlocky premise with humorless solemnity. Daniel Craig's Man With No Name wakes up with an alien bracelet and no memory, earning the ire of Harrison Ford's crusty cattle baron. Then UFO's attack, leaving the two to out-gruff each other and start a posse to rescue everyone from a space ship. The movie is grindingly violent, and it unforgivably refuses to remark upon the irony of white settlers having to team up with an Apache tribe to rescue their land from an occupying force seeking to pilfer resources and commit genocide. (At Boston Common, Fenway and the suburbs.)

Crazy, Stupid, Love ★★★ Unlike other freaky-deaky method actors like Sean Penn and Nicolas Cage, Ryan Gosling happens to look like a movie star, and this too-carefully structured romantic comedy benefits immeasurably from his brand of anarchy. Backing up a bit, the film stars Steve Carell (who also produced) as a middle-aged husband unceremoniously dropped by his childhood sweetheart (Julianne Moore) after she's had an ill-advised dalliance with a co-worker (a smarmy-as-ever Kevin Bacon). Adrift and alone for the first time in his life, Carell takes up residence on a barstool at a demographically unfriendly singles' haunt. The self-pity is enough to interrupt Gosling's idle rich, bar-cruising lothario, and the following makeover is at first a dizzying sort of Pygmalion. Sadly, Crazy, Stupid, Love can't sustain that level of manic invention and eventually settles into something more conventional, but pleasant all the same. Luckily, by then we're invested enough in these characters to cheer for the feel-good ending. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Friends with Benefits ★★★ Didn't we just see this movie? January's No Strings Attached starred charmless Ashton Kutcher exhibiting zero chemistry with Natalie Portman in a tale of two ridiculously good-looking 20-somethings foolishly attempting to enjoy one another's bodies without any of that pesky love stuff getting in the way. A mere six months later, we've got Justin Timberlake and Mila Kunis starring as two ridiculously good-looking 20-somethings foolishly attempting to enjoy one another's bodies without any of that pesky love stuff getting in the way. You can probably guess what happens, yet Friends

BOMBS AWAY

Jessie Eisenberg and Aziz Ansari practice the buddy system.

30 Minutes or Less ★★
Starring Jesse Eisenberg, Aziz Ansari, Danny McBride, Nick Swardson, Michael Peña and Fred Ward. Screenplay by Michael Diliberti. Directed by Ruben Fleischer.

Wilson Webb

IN 2003, A MIDDLE-AGED pizza deliveryman named Brian Wells held up an Erie, Penn. bank with a homemade bomb strapped around his neck. Claiming to have been forced into committing the robbery by the two worst tippers in the history of Mama Mia's Pizzeria—who happened to be holding a remote detonator—Wells exploded in front of news crews three minutes before the bomb squad arrived.

Recently chronicled in a riveting Wired article by Rich Schapiro, the so-called Collar Bomb Heist took seven years to solve, revealing a sad story of crack addiction, desperation and the extremely high probability that Wells himself was an accomplice in a get-rich-quick scheme gone horribly wrong. Then somebody in Hollywood got the bright idea that this sordid tale should become a buddy movie.

30 Minutes or Less steals a couple of broad strokes from the Collar Bomber case, but borrows more from '80s action-comedies. More often than not, it feels like one of those half-assed flicks you discover on late-night cable and don't bother surfing away from because it's amusing enough when you're stoned.

The Social Network's Jesse Eisenberg stars as Nick, a self-styled rebel and slacker who devotes most of his days to drinking beer, delivering pizzas and incessantly renting Lethal Weapon sequels from Blockbuster. (That Nick can find an operating video store is only the first of this picture's many credibility gaps.) He cements his proud-outsider status by making fun of Facebook, which, considering Eisenberg's resume, plays as more than a bit of a groaner.

His roommate, Chet (Parks and Recreation's Aziz Ansari), just got promoted from a substitute to a full-time teacher, so Nick's beery lack of ambition has begun to grate on their friendship. As has his longing for Chet's twin sister, Kate (Dilshad Vadsaria). The height of sophistication in Michael Diliberti's screenplay asks the time-honored question: if you lust after your best friend's twin sister, isn't that kind of gay?

I'm usually a sucker for McBride's self-aggrandizing redneck routine.

But then a funny thing happens during Nick's next delivery: He's kidnapped by a couple of yokels in monkey masks (Danny McBride and Nick Swardson), and ends up with a bomb strapped to his chest and instructions to rob the local bank or these two apes are going to detonate the charge.

McBride and Swardson are two ne'er-do-wells, stuck cleaning an Olympic-sized pool to collect an allowance from McBride's lottery-winning father (Fred Ward). Their lives are wasted drinking and blowing stuff up, until one day they stumble upon the idea to hire a hit man (Michael Peña, recycling his baby-lisp from Observe and Report) to off the old man, so that they can open a tanning salon with the inheritance. But first they have to make this kid rob a bank so they can pay for the hit man. Because that's what managers do: They delegate.

Why they couldn't just open a tanning salon with the bank robbery money eludes me. As nice as it is to see Fred Ward working again, the whole patricide/hit man angle feels like padding, at best. I'm usually a sucker for McBride's self-aggrandizing redneck routine, but 30 Minutes or Less devotes entirely too much screen time to his braggadocio, as he spins his wheels in a lot of undirected improv for no reason other than the movie's need to crawl to the finish line at 83 minutes.

Naturally, Nick enlists Chet to help him with the robbery, and I'd be lying if I said there weren't a few mildly amusing moments along the way. Director Ruben Fleischer helmed the similarly slender time killer Zombieland a couple of years back, and he doesn't have a bad eye for kinetic car chases. (Scoring the heist's aftermath with Don Henley's "The Heat is On" is just one of many homages to violent, potty-mouthed comedies of the Reagan era.)

In his first lead movie role, Ansari seems to be in a bit over his head. He succumbs to what I like to call "Jerry Seinfeld acting," where a comedian stands with his feet planted and arms locked firmly at his sides, shouting punchlines with little inflection. But Jesse Eisenberg goes all out and tries to deliver an actual performance here, taking the material far more seriously than it deserves. Sweaty, desperate and playing every scene as if he's still up for an Oscar, he's rather endearing.

I guess 30 Minutes or Less goes down easy enough, however bland and familiar—kind of like a cheap pizza. Remember to tip your driver. ✖✖✖ with Benefits is delightful all the same. Directed by Easy A's Will Gluck, it's a sexy, funny and very familiar picture, carried off by an effervescent atmosphere and some phenomenal chemistry between these two stars. In other words, it's the singers, not the song. I know there's a great joke in here somewhere about Kunis pulling a Black Swan and stealing Portman's role, but frankly I was too charmed by this picture to try and sort it out. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, Part II ★★★ In keeping with the slavish, Classics Illustrated film-to-screen transcriptions preferred by the ravenous fan base, the latest Harry Potter picture doesn't quite hold up as a movie of its own. This series has been dogged from day one by a preaching-to-the-choir mentality and an unwillingness to adapt to any real cinematic structure. BBC director David Yates (who helmed the final four installments) has an eye for spectacle and a bent towards TV-miniseries dramaturgy. It's nearly impossible for us muggles to even remotely understand what's happening anymore. But this final Potter movie flaunts an undeniable pop-apocalyptic grandeur, and it's finally got a freakin' ending. Ralph Fiennes' nose-less Voldemort keeps getting beat down by the upstart kids and their magical gobbledygook. With all the exposition dumps having taken place during the previous picture, we're now just watching one bloody payoff and epic battle sequence after another. I had no idea what was going on most of the time, but it's rather thrilling all the same. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Horrible Bosses ★★ A ramshackle assembly of recycled characters and conflicting tones duct-taped together at odd angles, director Seth Gordon's contribution to the summer of R-rated comedy squanders a wonderfully relatable premise: Who hasn't dreamed of murdering his employer at one point or another? Jasons Bateman and Sudeikis, along with It's Always Sunny in Philadelphia's ace screamer Charlie Day, star as middle-aged schlubs terrorized by irrational supervisors. Taking terrible advice from a "murder consultant" (Jamie Foxx), these sad-sacks dream up a triple-homicide conspiracy that—much like Horrible Bosses itself—never really makes it past the idea phase. The screenplay feels like a first draft, suffering from a crippling lack of consistency and the delusion that dirty words are, in and of themselves, hilarious. The characterizations of our leads are sketchy at best, relying on shorthand from previous roles. The movie can't quite figure out a way to get all three bosses into the same scenario, or even the same comic universe. It feels like channel-surfing. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Midnight in Paris ★★★ ½ I know. Everyone always tells you that the new one is Woody Allen's comeback film. I've been burned by that rap, too. But this is a lighter-than-air, casually profound piece that calls to mind The Purple Rose of Cairo in its magical realism and ruefully funny undercurrents. Owen Wilson stars as a hack Hollywood screenwriter vacationing in Paris who finds himself magically transported to the 1920s, where he boozes it up with Ernest Hemingway, F. Scott Fitzgerald and Adrien Brody's hilariously self-infatuated Salvador Dalí. The punchline comes early: While Wilson was always pining for "the good old days," once he gets there, he discovers that everybody else shares his longing. Gorgeously shot by cinematographer Daris Khondji and directed by Allen with a care we haven't seen in eons, it's a deceptively slight exploration of nostalgia as beautiful quicksand. The only thing keeping this from being a classic is Allen's typically misogynistic treatment of Rachel McAdams' character. Otherwise, it's lovely. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Charm School

Shop Talk

Ryan Gosling tries to school a heartbroken Steve Carell in affairs of the heart in Crazy, Stupid, Love.

Sarah's Key ★ ½ Isn't it a little early in the year for an Oscar-grubbing Holocaust movie? Working from the novel by Tatiana De Rosnay, director Gilles Paquet-Brenner follows spiky journalist Kristin Scott Thomas and family, who move into a fashionable Parisian apartment owned for half the century by her bourgeoisie in-laws. With the real estate market being what it was back in 1942, how did these folks ever score such a fancy flat? Well, it turns out the liquidation of France's Jewish ghetto was somehow involved, and we're sent on an ever-misleading string of flashbacks and seemingly sinister family ties that all basically revolve around one pushy reporter feeling guilty that she married into money. Exploitative to a fault, the second storyline follows our title character as she tries to escape the camps and rescue a kid brother who she locked in this particular apartment's closet. At least the ghastly payoff is left off-screen, but there's no excuse for this dour film to march onward for another hour after that. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Super 8 ★★ Proving you can mimic a visual signature without understanding any of the reasons why it's successful, writer-director J.J. Abrams fashions a slavishly nostalgic tribute to Steven Spielberg films of the late '70s and early '80s. Cribbing entire shot-lists from Close Encounters and E.T., Super 8 tells the tale of kids from broken homes trying to make a zombie movie, when a train accident suddenly frees a ferociously disappointing alien. Abrams nails all his mentor's patented slow-dolly shots toward characters gazing upwards in wide-eyed wonder, but he's lacking Spielberg's sense of magic—not to mention his storytelling efficiency. Super 8 doesn't make much sense and lacks momentum. Plot complications are arbitrary and so easily reversed, you could probably remove any given reel of the film without altering the outcome. Saving it from complete disaster is young Joel Courtney as a lovestruck movie nerd, and an amazing turn from Elle Fanning as the heartsick gal of his dreams. The rest is bad karaoke. (In the suburbs.)

Transformers: Dark of the Moon ★ To say this is the best Transformers movie isn't saying much. The picture surpasses its notorious forebears by being visually accomplished, occasionally coherent and nowhere near as jaw-droppingly racist as the two films that came before. Am I damning with faint praise? Well, it's also mind-numbingly boring. Some folks have been applauding Dark of the Moon's final reels, a solid (no kidding) hour of rock'em, sock'em fighting robots, toppling skyscrapers and citywide devastation on a scale never seen before in movies. Personally, I was so bored I wanted to take a nap. Hamstrung by the constraints of 3-D technology, Bay finally has to hold a shot for more than three seconds and plan out his action sequences. But he still has no idea how to pace a scene. There are no stakes, and the action never rises or falls. There's just one single note of sensory overload. After 15 minutes of this I was checking my watch; a half hour later I was rolling my eyes. (In the suburbs.)

The Tree of Life ★★★ ½ "Other people make movies; Terrence Malick builds cathedrals," my brilliant colleague Matt Zoller Seitz is fond of saying. This dream project for the director, some 30 years in the making, feels like the ultimate expression of Malick's particular worldview. With even the title flirting with self-parody, the picture seeks to reconcile one child's troubled upbringing in the 1950s with the entire history of the universe. It is by turns rapturous, astonishing and occasionally silly. I adore the ambition and am in awe of the accomplishment, even if I'm still not sure it all hangs together. Taking the form of a whispered prayer to a God who may or may not be listening, the fractured narrative unspools in symphonic movements. But after one viewing, I'm still not convinced that Malick is quite able to reconcile the quotidian with the cosmic. His final, surreal sequence on a mystical beach is unfortunate. But good heavens, the film is a wonder to behold. Malick's reach exceeds his grasp—but that is one hell of a reach. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

X-Men: First Class ★★ ½ Opting for a top-to-bottom reboot after the dreadful Wolverine, Marvel Comics' most allegory-friendly franchise sets the wayback machine to the early 1960s for this diverting, if pointless, prequel. A surprisingly credible James McAvoy plays the young psychic Professor Charles Xavier, while movie-star in the making Michael Fassbender fills in for Ian McKellan as the embittered Holocaust survivor Magneto. Cobbled together from several different scripts and sped into production on a truncated 10-month schedule, X-Men: First Class is a rush-job that has a few moments good enough to make you wish the entire film was better. Helmed by Kick-Ass director Matthew Vaughn, with his camera set to maximum leer, the movie revels in Playboy Club fashions and scantily clad coeds. Suffering from a severe case of overcrowding, First Class doesn't even get around to the obligatory training montage until over 90 minutes into the picture. By the time everyone is done introducing themselves, it's already time for the climactic action scene. Should a sequel be in the cards, a little patience would go a long way. (In the suburbs.)

JAZZ AGE

Sax upstart Grace Kelly sets the right tone.

Grace Kelly plays at the Institute of Contemporary Art on Aug. 25.

GRACE KELLY WILL never forget her first album release party. "I remember the feeling I had once I hit the stage—that it's always felt like a second home," says the alto sax prodigy, who was only 12 years old when she released Dreaming. "Part of my subconscious still probably thinks I'll forever be 12 or 13 because those years I said my age more than anything onstage."

Today, the Brookline-bred jazz upstart has seven albums under her belt as she prepares to graduate from Berklee in December. At 19, she's already toured the U.S. and Europe, sat in with Dave Brubeck and Wynton Marsalis, and played with the Boston Pops.

This summer alone has been a whirlwind for Kelly, hitting major jazz fests from Montreal to Newport, where her quintet performs on Aug. 6 with alto great Phil Woods.

Woods, who appears on her recent album Man with the Horn, will return as a guest at Rockport's Shalin Liu Performance Center on Aug. 28. On their own, Kelly and her band have several other local dates booked, including free shows in Kendall Square and at the Institute of Contemporary Art on Aug. 25.

Born Grace Chung, before she was adopted by her stepfather and took his last name, Kelly took piano lessons at age six and soon gravitated toward improvisation. She began playing clarinet in the fourth grade but switched to the alto sax a few months later. "It wasn't something I thought would be a career," she says. "It just sort of organically took off.

"I got a nice tone right away," says Kelly, noting she chose the alto for its more comfortable size. "Weirdly enough, I listen to a lot more tenor players… but I stick with the alto because it fits my voice range, and that's where I hear notes in my head."

Two years later, her middle-school teacher urged the aspiring saxophonist/singer to make her first album and enlist noted acoustic bassist John Lockwood to play with her.

> "If Charlie Parker was still alive, maybe he'd be collaborating with hip-hop artists."

"I surround myself with musicians who are much better than me so I can sound better and I can be pushed," Kelly says. "It raised the bar." From that debut, pianist Doug Johnson and drummer Jordan Perlson still anchor Kelly's quintet, rounded out by members Evan Gregor on bass and Jason Palmer on trumpet.

Kelly says working with and learning from alto hero Woods and mentor Lee Konitz have made her a more accomplished artist. Konitz, guitarist Russell Malone, bassist Rufus Reid and drummer Matt Wilson contributed on GRACEfulLEE, which Downbeat magazine listed as one of the best CDs of the 2000s. "The stuff I learn on the bandstand that just soaks in musically is so inspiring," Kelly adds.

In addition to Woods and Konitz, Kelly follows the model of bebop pioneer (and fellow alto saxophonist) Charlie Parker. "I'll always be rooted in the bebop tradition 'cause that's what I studied," she says. "But I do see things in today's music that interest me. If Charlie Parker was still alive, maybe he'd be collaborating with hip-hop artists because he was thinking so far ahead."

Kelly may not be going hip-hop, but she's branching out beyond blues jams with harmonica ace James Montgomery. In her other band, the Experiment, she's exploring her singer/songwriter side with folk-pop, which they'll perform at Berklee's convocation ceremonies on Sept. 4. Her new album, Grace, also features a jazz duo with pianist George Russell Jr., inspired by her performance at a 2010 ministers' convention.

"I found a lot of magic in it, magic between the audience and the music, and there was a different type of connection," Kelly says. "I got the bug in my ear and gathered some of my favorite hymns and rearranged them so they're more contemporary or jazzy."

As for her future, she says, "I always hope I can get to work with Paul McCartney and Sting, somehow. Big dreams, I know." ✖✖✖

Chairmen

Denmark's the Spot Copenhagen-based group the Figurines have been in the indie music business since the mid-'90s. With colorfully looped synth waves creeping through singer Christian Hjelm's raw tenor, they've always sported a slick independence. The band's newest, self-titled album takes their poppy, feel-good tunes to a more complex level, adding mellow bass and guitar riffs in addition to trippy electric high-steps. The Scandinavian beats flood Brighton Music Hall on Aug. 19.

Star-Spangled Snapshots If you feel the MFA's year-old Art of the Americas Wing is starting to lose some of its novelty, Modernist Photography 1910-1950 may invigorate your view. The exhibit's images chronicle American life through wartime, Prohibition, the Great Depression and all the upheavals of the early 20th century. But the show doesn't stop with snapshots: Works from the Lane Collection and an original graphite piece by Georgia O'Keefe emphasize the lasting impact the lens has had on America's sense of self. Look the past in the eye through April 2012. Kathleen Godbold

Tooth and Nail

Love Bites

Family dysfunction is a common literary trope, but Kevin Wilson's debut novel, The Family Fang, is no tawdry sob story. An acclaimed short-story author known for his character development, Wilson introduces Buster and Annie Fang, the children of wacky performance artists. The two leave home as teenagers, but ultimately have no choice but to embrace their parents and return home for one last show. Wilson visits the Harvard Book Store on Aug. 22 to discuss his writing process.

A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

HARU [55 Huntington Ave., Boston, 617-536-0770, www.harusushi.com] Haru is a modern Japanese restaurant group known for its ample portions and striking designs. Located street level below the Shops at Prudential Center, Haru serves inventive Japanese cuisine ranging from sushi, sashimi and creative salads to signature dishes like ceviches, tartares, filet mignon and specialty rolls. The 6,100 sq. ft. space boasts a striking private dining room, elegant sushi bar, and lively bar and lounge scene perfect for people-watching. Catering and delivery also available.

L'ANDANA [86 Cambridge Street, Burlington, 781-270-0100, www.landanagrill.com] L'Andana will transport you to the foothills of Tuscany. The restaurant spins the rustic look of an old world farmhouse into a modern interpretation of the faraway countryside. Chef Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Robert Jean work together to create cuisine that is equally fresh, authentic and contemporary Italian as well as featuring a selection of items from a wood grill. Full bar, extensive wine list, complimentary valet parking, and a striking private dining room are welcome amenities. Dinner Sunday-Saturday.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, www.mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SORELLINA [One Huntington Avenue, Boston, 617-412-4600, www.sorellinaboston.com] Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Robert Jean prepare contemporary regional Italian/Mediterranean food in this sophisticated setting in Copley Square. Matching the creative cuisine is a warm-modern design highlighted by a glowing mural and expansive floor-to-ceiling windows. Settle into soft leather upholstery and enjoy the finely-craft-

MOONING OVER

Does Neil Armstrong Know About Us?

I expected them to be passing out space condoms at Ben Mezrich's launch party for his new book, Sex on the Moon, but it turned out to be unnecessary.

Not that the crowd wasn't super sexy. Assembled at the W to fete the author were such luminaries as Mezrich's stunning wife, Tonya, the book's protagonist, Thad Roberts, party pair Tiffany and J.B. Dowd, pulchritudinous news anchor Bianca de la Garza, Kabuki socialite Marilyn Riseman accompanied by her pre-facelift socialite granddaughter, Joanna Prager, stylist extraordinaire Liana Peterson Krupp, the dangerous duo of Laura Baldini and Evelyn Peralta, hair deity Sal Malafronte with his boy-toy banker Darin Contini, beauty pageant judge AJ Williams, babe-a-licious brunette Jessica Naddaff, Mandarin Oriental wonder-woman Edwina Kluender and her husband, Brian Adams, the Four Seasons' answer to Julie McCoy, Kristan Fletcher, and the devilishly handsome Dave Khtikian, the larger-than-life Ashley and Paul Bernon, hipster hotelier Tim Brett and his stunning girlfriend, Liza Gorman, and several guys wearing space suits (which, truth be told, looked like they would be impossible to have sex in, and not just on the moon).

The decor and the DJ kept the vibe space-age mod, while the vodka flowed freely and guests asked Mezrich to sign copies of his soon-to-be bestseller.

The evening's most amusing remark: Regarding the book's title, one guest said, "I've heard of the mile-high club, but this is ridiculous."

A Little Night Music

While Native Americans would call for rain by dancing, the Boston Symphony Orchestra does it simply by hosting Opening Night at Tanglewood.

Without fail, the gala kickoff to the symphony's summer season in the Berkshires conjures up a torrential downpour, but miraculously, the sky always seems to clear up and the sun peeks out by the time the big shots arrive under the white tent on the lawn of Highwood, the Victorian mansion where cocktails and dinner precede the concert.

This year, there was an Italian theme (hence the party's title: "La Prima di Tanglewood"),

Bianca de la Garza at Ben Mezrich's book party

Tonya and Ben Mezrich at Ben's book party

Kristan Fletcher and Dave Khtikian at Ben Mezrich's book party

Dora Lewin and Deval Patrick at Opening Night at Tanglewood

Kristine and Kevin Sprague at Opening Night at Tanglewood

Mark Morris and friend at Opening Night at Tanglewood

Erik, Anna and Phil Auerbach at Opening Night at Tanglewood

and on hand to make sure the food was on par with a Roman orgy was celebrity chef Lydia Shire, who cooked up a storm that rivaled the weather.

> One guest said, "I've heard of the mile-high club, but this is ridiculous."

Present and accounted for: Governor and Mrs. Deval Patrick, dance-world legend Mark Morris (who popped in unexpectedly), gala cochairs Susie and Stuart Hirshfield and Robin Richman and Bruce Auerbach, his sons, Erik and Phil and daughter-in-law Anna, the BSO's grand high poobah Mark Volpe and the delectable Martha, force of nature Nancy Feldman, the ever-delightful Carole and Ed Rudman, fashion plate Joyce Linde, the adorable Dan Mathieu and Tom Potter, velvet-throated radio personality Ron della Chiesa and his sexy mamacita, Joyce, Western Mass. bluebloods Kevin and Kristine Sprague, puckish party guy Peter Hansen, Cantabridgians Bill and Lia Poorvu with their son, Jonathan, and daughter-in-law, Amy, banking babes Dora Lewin and Dyan Goodwin with their respective spouses, concert pianist Michael and Renaissance man Rob Serio, and one woman who observed that conductor Charles Dutoit "could use a new colorist."

Dinner was delicious, the concert—featuring works by Bellini, Rossini, Verdi and Respighi—was an Italian feast unto itself, and the after-party back at Highwood… well, let's just say that what happens at Highwood stays at Highwood.

The evening's award for silliest thing to worry about went to the woman who planned to wear the same dress the following night at a party in Newport, and wondered, "Is anyone from 413 going to be in 401?" However, the most amusing comment came when someone mentioned the nearby yoga retreat Kripalu, which prompted another guest to say, "It's fabulous… except that the whole place smells like feet." ✖✖✖

It Takes a Pillage

During the London riots, some observers noticed that the looters showed a marked taste for expensive sneakers. Nary a Foot Locker in the city, it seems, went unmolested. So when society collapses into cinders and Hobbesian chaos, it turns out that the height of aspiration is a pair of $135 athletic shoes. Puzzled by this, I took an informal office poll of what the edit staff plans to loot when our own city descends into brutal, tooth-and-claw class warfare:

14 percent said food.
14 percent said Hermès.
14 percent said a bicycle. (Nice one, Nick.)
57 percent said booze.

The correct answer is, of course, Hermès. Once the gutters stop running with the blood of innocents, your stolen Glenfiddich will just be a hangover, a skidmark on the brain. But a forward-thinking looter understands that fashion is a treasure. Yes, a label is just a shred of cloth, and anyone who tries to impress other human beings by wearing an $8,000 handbag has all the force of character of a squished newt. But as the English rioters taught us, at the end of days, if a mere pair of sneakers is so desirable, surely a cashmere scarf is worth a few torched city blocks. Fashion trumps the fall of civilization.

In this issue, fashion editor Alexandra Hall launches a glorious new chapter in our coverage of all things couture. We're taking you down, Vogue. Bring it.

DANIEL FAUCHER started reading bridal magazines at age nine. At 13, he had his first customer. For more than 25 years he's worked in the South End as a couture designer (and for the past 15 he's dabbled in drag, now performing monthly at 28 Degrees). From the first stitch to final detail, Faucher works step by step with clients, who this summer included a woman eight months pregnant and excited for her second marriage. "She said it was the first time she felt that she could say she was beautiful," says Faucher. "She was twice the size she was the first time, and the dress was center stage."

The 1,700-mile stretch between Austin and Boston is a veritable wasteland for those looking for breakfast tacos. But if you weave your way through the narrow streets of Bay Village, you'll find the folks at Mike & Patty's cook up a respectable, even outstanding, interpretation in their closet-sized kitchen. Served with melted cheese and salsa packing just enough burn, the scrambled Country Hen egg is shoehorned into a double layer of griddled corn tortillas along with a Texas-sized dollop of creamy refritos. Now let's see those Austin hipsters try to make chowder. ELIZABETH BOMZE

Thick and Thin

Bold brows are back. Stop going pluck happy and revisit the early Brooke Shields days. "We've definitely noticed a lot of our guests asking for a fuller, more natural brow," says Skoah spa owner Pete Dziedzic. "The era of the thin brow is pretty over." A grown-out look may seem low-maintenance, but it still takes skill. To help achieve the perfect arch, Skoah rolled out the Brow Star Treatment, a combination of waxing and tweezing that includes a pampering hand-and-arm massage. You'll also learn how to fill in areas that need a little love. In 30 minutes, you'll be in great shape. AMANDA KNORR

VOWS HUNTING

WIFE WANTED: And I'll do all the cooking and cleaning—I actually enjoy it! Romantic, Mediterranean chef, 6 ft., 255 lbs., Taurus, enjoys the arts, music, animals and the outdoors. Seeks oceanfront-home-owning gal, aged 30–100. I'll love, care for and protect you for the rest of our lives. Don't settle for being alone any longer. Write me and tell me all about yourself. Include your phone number.

Box 230328, Boston, MA 02123

To the fat female cyclist who rides along the river each morning:

You're going way too fast, and because of your large size, you create wind. Is that the reason you keep ringing your bell like a crazy person? The Esplanade is for everyone—beasts like you, normal people and children, many of whom are beginners. The way you ride isn't safe. Calm down!

Stress might make your ass bigger

For Billy, the conductor on the 4:20 pm commuter train to Kingston:

Every time I pass you standing outside the control car, waiting for passengers to board, I smile and imagine getting a hug and warm, gentle kiss from you. We've never spoken, and I don't know if you're in a relationship, but you do something for me. Each time I see you I have the urge to introduce myself and ask if you're available, but I'm too shy. Whoever you're with is a very lucky person. Shy gal

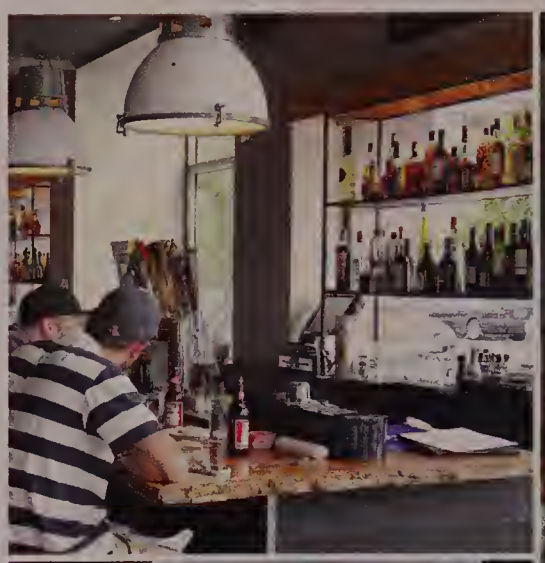
CLOSET CASE

Susan Davidson, president/CEO of Scoop NYC, is known for her work with DKNY Jeans, Zac Posen and Z Spoke. Scoop will open its first Boston boutique on Newbury Street this fall.

How do you buy for the Boston client?
We did focus groups to see what people here needed. It's about tailoring an assortment to a location but keeping a consistent DNA.



What's the most wearable trend for autumn?
There was such a strong trend toward color for spring and summer, and I definitely see that continuing. Things like the electric blue or red denim that women loved will transition into colorful corduroys. We always do well with fur vests, because it's the perfect timeless staple: incredibly warm, chic and versatile.

How do you categorize Boston's style?
When people say New England, that tends to say preppy. But preppy can be done with a twist. If we're stocking a Lacoste T-shirt in our store, maybe we'd do it in a wash that's a little more hip than classic. You can't categorize it because there aren't clear lines in a city with an international population.

How can you balance function and fashion in bad weather?
There are many cold weather pieces that are certainly fashionable, like trapper hats or earmuffs. Really, layering is the key though. Cashmere sweaters that are lightweight but still warm can carry you all the way through from September to spring.

Who shops at your store?
People who want to mix trend pieces with their favorites, and maybe put it together in an unexpected way. KYLE WRIGHT

FAMILY STYLE

Kendall Square has long had the reputation of a neighborhood that shuts down when the techies log off for the evening. But as the recent string of restaurant openings proves, professional Googlers and their cohorts often prefer bites to gigabytes.

"This was always an untouched area in terms of food," says Jason Lord, chef at the newly launched Abigail's, a family-run place that aims to draw local workers and passersby alike. He thinks that restaurants are staking out territory before retailers overrun all the real estate. "People always want to be the first," he continues, "We just want to do it right."

"WE'RE HERE TO MAKE THE FOOD PEOPLE WANT TO EAT."

Lord met James Ludwig, co-owner with wife Sarah Murnane, in the kitchen at Inman Square destination East Coast Grill. They're now hoping to replicate success in this fast-growing neighborhood. Their strategy: "We're here to make the food that people want to eat," Lord says.

Abigail's Third Street space affords the luxury of customization, allowing for touches like a sloping back wall and an 1890s train track that's been repurposed as a foot rail, both decor focal points. The dining room is a gumbo of taupey shades that aim to ease instead of dazzle, giving a warm backdrop to hearty dishes like yellowfin tuna with panzanella salad and sweet corn sauce.

Abigail's menu has an eye for the organic and responsibly grown, with seasonality and sustainability recurring as leitmotifs. A raw bar exclusively features East Coast oysters and clams, while herbs are grown out back in a small garden.

Street windows flood the room with natural light and encourage people-watching. The mood is laid-back and easy. Behind a raw-edged elm bar, local legend Rob Iurilli, formerly of the B-Side Lounge, leads the cocktail program. "Everything is juiced, muddled and infused by hand," Lord says. "There are no short cuts." KYLE WRIGHT

A PARENT'S GARDEN OF VERSES

Love poetry for the post-parturition set

BEING A PARENT IS AS mystical as poetry itself. In this CD/book package, two friends read aloud poems about parenthood. Wonderfully, the famous poet/parents they've collected express the aching adoration that manifests itself in adult love songs. Thomas Lux talks to his daughter's sonogram: "You'll recognize / me—I'll be the tall-seeming, delighted / blond guy, and I'll have / your nose."

Barbara Kingsolver notes the existential oddity of gestation: "Later, as I postpone weeding the garden, / I will make two hands / That may tend a hundred gardens." And there's the tenderness of loss—Linda Pastan watching her daughter "leaving home" on a bike: "more breakable / with distance, / pumping, pumping / for your life, screaming / with laughter, / the hair flapping / behind you like a / handkerchief waving / goodbye." Rachel Hadas feels the same: "The watcher's heart / stretches, elastic in its love and fear, / toward him as we see him disappear, / striding briskly." Rosemary and Stephen Vincent Benét imagine Lincoln's mother's ghost returning: "She'd ask first / 'Where's my son? / What's happened to Abe? / What's he done?'" The romance of parenthood suffuses these poems; "I have a daughter shaped / like a golden bouquet" says Sappho. One could nurse, or sigh delightedly, reading these. ×××

Little Feet
Little feet, too young and soft to walk,
Little lips, too young and pure to talk.

My baby has a mottled fist,
My baby has a neck in creases,
My baby kisses and is kissed,
For he's the very thing for kisses.

Of all the prints displayed on the fall runways, one stood above the rest. Polka dots were a designer favorite, with Marc Jacobs, Stella McCartney and Diane von Furstenberg all embracing the bold pattern. Try a black-and-white combo—it's sophisticated and forever classic.

What wines pair with dorm food?

TJ DOUGLAS, OWNER OF THE URBAN GRAPE

COOL RANCH DORITOS
Pair with Charles Smith Royal City Rosé ($36)
"This wine, with hints of smoky dried raspberries and strawberries, would mix well with the freshness of Cool Ranch. It's a mix of salty and savory for an overall clean taste."

PEANUT BUTTER AND JELLY
Pair with Marenco Brachetto D'Acqui ($25)

"It's a sparkling red wine so it's festive, but its low alcohol content makes it good for a lunchtime PB&J pairing. And this is one of the few wines in the world that actually tastes like grape."

JUICY FRUIT GUM
Pair with Poochi Poochi Sparkling Sake ($17)
"It matches some of the fruity sweetness of the gum on the front, but the bubbles give lift in the back for a dry finish, so the sake wouldn't overpower the Juicy Fruit."

KRAFT EASY MAC
Pair with Grandmaster Chardonnay ($12)
"The buttery and juicy overtones of the wine would work well with the creaminess and cheesiness of the Kraft."

TOP RAMEN NOODLES
Pair with Loca Linda Torrontes ($18, liter bottle)
"On the front it offers a kind of fruity taste with tons of floral and pear notes. But it also has really high acidity which would definitely work well with the saltiness of Ramen."

Drink of the Moment

WAKE-UP CALL

From Brother Cleve's Monday tiki nights at Think Tank to Kowloon's kitschy tiki lagoon, the summer offered up a glut of tropical tipples sporting novelty umbrellas. Dropping temperatures and changing leaves, however, turn the mind toward graver matters. Cue the Corpse Reviver with its creepy cool and autumnal mystery.

KO Prime's view of the historic Granary Burying Ground provided bartender Asher Karnes with the inspiration to riff on the classic cocktail. A take on the Corpse Reviver #1, the GRANARY CORPSE REVIVER↓ ($12) is a masculine drink fit for any resuscitated Revolutionary.

Karnes mixes equal parts extra-aged Calvados, Delamain XO Cognac and house-made vermouth to accentuate the Calvados' apple flavors. Though Cognac dominates the palate, freshly ground nutmeg adds spice notes on the nose, and a long, not-quite-ripe apple finish brightens the taste. Together, the ingredients conjure New England apple picking with a buzz.

It's as a hangover cure, though, that the Corpse Reviver earned its reputation on the hotel bar's menu. "People can just stumble down from their rooms," Karnes says. "And they do. Even in the middle of the afternoon." It's the ideal remedy for last night's luau, even if you're dead on your feet. LINDSEY CANANT

COSMIC CUISINE

A herbivore's agenda

"SMOKED TOFU IS one of the most amazing things," chef Brian Van Etten says. "It's changed people's lives." Hyperbole? Well, 10 years ago, when Adam Penn unveiled Veggie Planet in Harvard Square, there were almost no restaurants for vegetarians. Today, smoked tofu aside, they have a range of choices, and that range will expand at the end of the month when Penn opens Veggie Galaxy in Central Square.

From the old-school diner design—it's a long narrow space with sloping ceilings and lots of stainless steel—to the breakfast-all-day policy, Veggie Galaxy strikes a balance between traditional fare, like burgers and salads, and the current tastes of discriminating vegetarians. For example, there's a vegan omelet made with silken tofu, spices and nutritional yeast that Van Etten describes as a "fluffy tofu pancake." Also on-site is a full commercial vegan bakery, featuring the likes of eggless meringues.

Wine

Safe Harbors

As fall approaches, the cravings for PORT begin to build. If you have a sweet tooth, it's an amazingly delicious drink and the best match for chocolate ever. (My general rule: One decadent pleasure may be enough, but why skimp?) And for cheese addicts, there's a Port for (almost) every one of your favorites.

The following represents great value in the most popular high-end categories. Remember, unlike most other wines, you can open a bottle, pour out a wee dram, recork it and not have to worry about deterioration for weeks.

MASTER OF WINE SANDY BLOCK IS VICE PRESIDENT OF BEVERAGE OPERATIONS FOR LEGAL SEA FOODS.

Quinta do Noval 10 YEAR OLD TAWNY ($33, MARTIGNETTI'S, BRIGHTON) Aged tawnies are magical expressions of what can happen when you allow a complex wine to develop in cask. Noval makes one of the best, a touch on the nutty side, with pronounced toffee and espresso notes. This is killer with lighter-milk-chocolate–flavored desserts, like a creamy mousse. If you prefer cheese, try Tête de Moine from the Jura, a delicate but tangy semihard cow's milk variety.

Fonseca 20 YEAR OLD TAWNY ($50, ATLAS, MEDFORD) At 20 years, Ports become a touch drier, but also much more concentrated and velvety. Fonseca, known as "the Margaux of Port," walks a tightrope between lusciousness and vibrant intensity. It's browner in color, with butterscotch, maple and fresh fig scents. Try this heady drink with a chocolate nut torte, or a great Spanish sheep's milk cheese like Zamorano.

Fonseca LATE BOTTLED VINTAGE 2005 ($23, MARTY'S, NEWTON) This is one terrific bargain. Unlike most LBV, Fonseca's Port is "traditional," meaning unfiltered, so it'll throw a touch of sediment. Deep ruby colored with a black cherry and mint aroma, it has more tannic brawn than the tawnies. Loaded with blackberry, clove and dark cocoa notes, it's a great match for bittersweet chocolate or slightly salty cow's milk cheese from Lombardy.

A modern restaurant aims to fit in with the old crowd.

SHELL GAME Starting with the drunken mussels is a smart choice.

AS A RECENT SETTLER IN Southie, I may lack the historical memory to put Local 149 in context. Some of my neighbors lament the passing of the Farragut House, which Local 149 replaced, and remark that the newcomer's menu better befits Cambridge (or, underlining their distrust, Newbury Street). Others have criticized the small portions and lack of value-priced options. There's a bit of truth to these knocks, and there's an inconsistency to the dishes, but in the end, the restaurant's energy and enthusiasm carry the day.

The kitchen brings imagination and flair to its "drunken mussels" ($9), sautéed shellfish in beer with slices of Italian sausage and orange segments. The marriage of fresh mussels (and plenty of them—this dish is a good option for the famished) with the licorice overtones of sausage and sambuca, and sweet-bitter notes of orange, rendered a complex, delectable broth that begged to be slurped with a spoon. A large leaf of endive envelops the "all crab cake" ($12), which lived up to its billing and was balanced with a refreshing garnish of lemony guacamole. Fried Brussels sprouts ($7) could've been more tender, but the chipotle-lime and blue-cheese dipping sauces were right on the mark.

Hog wings ($9) and duck drumsticks ($7) provided variations on a sweet barbecue theme. The three hefty pork ribs were coated in hoisin sauce, and the two plump duck legs had a tangy berry glaze. Both options tasted tender and juicy, while julienned Granny Smith apples and jicama added a crunchy counterpoint to the duck. The menu made a limited but highly successful foray into starch with its scampi with angel hair ($18), in which slender pasta strands joined a generous assortment of flavorful lobster, shrimp, baby octopus and mussels, all bathed in lemon and garlic butter with fresh ginger.

The dry-aged New York sirloin, tied for the restaurant's priciest offering at $20, brought a tender, decent-sized strip, but the misguided presentation diminished the impact. For some perverse reason, the steak was cut in half and presented on two heavily breaded, deep-fried onion rings—rendered soggy by the steak—and topped with another trio of rings. These muddled heavy flavors did both items a disservice. Lamb T-bone ($19) combined a small but exquisite loin chop with summer lamb sausage, crispy polenta and Greek yogurt. Pork and clams ($18) attracted my attention, as I thought it meant the traditional Portuguese dish, pork alentejana. I was wrong. It turned out to be a dish that paired fried clams with dry, tough, pork osso bucco, which tasted odd and mismatched. Even so, a garnish of potato salad with celery, green olives and corn almost saved the plate. I would've gladly traded in both the pork and clams for another scoop.

As one might expect at a restaurant that prides itself on its beer selection, Local 149 serves up excellent burgers: the Local cheeseburger ($10), with tasty, grass-fed beef, pickled green tomatoes and tangy Caerphilly cheddar from Maine; and a tuna burger of rare, juicy yellow fin ($15) with caramelized onion marmalade and wasabi pickles. Dozens of different drafts, bottles and cans are available to pair with these. The St. Bernardus ($11 for 750 ml) from Watou, Belgium, delivered high-octane body with full flavor and a touch of sweetness. A draft Dogfish Head 90 Minute IPA ($7.25 for 250 ml) couldn't match the flavor of its bottled version, but a pint of hoppy Southern Tier IPA ($5.50) was first-rate, and a bargain at the price. The non-reserve wine list has a dozen selections, of which I recommend the Alaia Merlot-Temperanillo blend ($22). It provides good fruit, structure and bang for your buck.

For dessert, we passed on the dubious-sounding fried fluffernutter ($6) and picked the chocolate torte ($8): triangles of deep, dark, intense chocolate, a scoop of salted caramel ice cream, a dollop of whipped cream and a rotating cast of toppings—in my case, macadamia nuts. It was a perfect ending, and as we savored it, we basked in the pleasant surroundings, admiring the fireplace, the square bar and the windows letting in the early evening sunlight. With the right menu selections, you'll eat well here, leave happy, and consider making this your local spot. ✖✖✖

The Ally Foundation's eighth annual "Beacon Rock Gala" was held at the Beacon Rock Mansion in Newport, R.I., on June 25. Some 300 people attended the dance party and auction, which raised $50,000 toward sex crime prevention in memory of the late Alexandra Zapp.

The French Cultural Center's 36th "Bastille Day Party" hit Marlborough Street on July 15. Some 2,000 revelers enjoyed food and entertainment by Francophone musicians Yoro Ndiaye and Rupa & the April Fishes. Major donors enjoyed a VIP reception on the Center's front lawn. The event, which celebrated France's national holiday, raised approximately $25,000.

HITTING MY STRIDE

The New Balance biomechanics lab puts some science in my step.

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

LAST YEAR, I WROTE A STORY on barefoot running, and the experience precipitated a change in my running style. Instead of landing on my heel, I now land on my forefoot. I'm not the only one embracing a more natural stride. Last fall, I went to a NASCAR race in Florida, and my buddy Elliot came along for the festivities. When we woke up the morning of the race, I was surprised to see him pull on a pair of ultra-minimal Vibram FiveFingers to go for a jog. It's safe to say that Elliot didn't have a lot of company on his morning run around the Homestead RV lot. Which is probably lucky, because barefoot running is likely the type of thing that most NASCAR fans view with abject derision, like Hondas or science. (Just kidding, NASCAR fans. I know some of you own Hondas.)

While I've adapted to a new style, I've never consulted with anyone to find out if I'm doing it right. I just figured, "Run like you're barefoot, except wear shoes because the ground is gross." So when New Balance offered to analyze my stride at its sports research lab in Lawrence, I decide to take advantage. We'll test my running style and attempt to quantify perfection.

At the lab, deep in the bowels of an old mill building that houses the New Balance factory store, I meet with a fellow named Trampas. Trampas has a PhD in biomechanics, so having him analyze my stride is kind of like having Stephen Hawking do a tune-up on your '79 Malibu. He ushers me to a treadmill that's surrounded by instrumentation to measure the magnificence, or lack thereof, of the running specimen. I lace up a pair of fresh shoes and climb aboard.

Before I reveal the staggering results of my test session, I should probably explain why I have a soft spot for New Balance. Outsourcing is the norm for shoe companies, but about 25 percent of New Balance shoes are produced domestically. Of course, some of its shoes are still made in the kind of bleak industrial setting that would make Charles Dickens shudder in horror at the sheer oppressiveness of the scene. I'm talking about Skowhegan, Maine.

Cutting-edge technology

I have an inherent problem with running that way: People might see me.

New Balance, to its credit, has a factory in Skowhegan. And I can make fun of Skowhegan because I'm from there—well, not Skowhegan, thank God. But Maine. And people from Maine like to abuse Skowhegan. Even if, like me, you grew up in an even smaller town, one whose major claim to fame is a historic cow pound, which is a big circle of rocks where they once kept cows. I know what you're thinking, and sometimes even I wonder how I made it through childhood without dying of excitement.

After a quarter-mile run, we check out the super slo-mo video, shot with a high-speed camera. And it turns out that I have decent form. My foot lands square and doesn't torque sideways. Trampas tells me that, if anything, I need to increase my cadence, the number of strides taken for a given distance. My stride is a little long, which increases "braking," the tendency to slow down as your foot lands. Apparently you run more efficiently if you take those dorky little runner-guy strides. I could try that, but I have an inherent problem with running that way: People might see me. I mean, I'd probably be more efficient if I wore flimsy nylon short-shorts, too, but you don't see me wearing those outside the comfort of my airplane seat. (They're comfortable for traveling, OK?)

So I'm happy to say that my stride is basically the envy of all Kenyans. There's only one more thing to discover: What's inside my shoes. You see, I walked into New Balance wearing a pair of shoes from a competitor. I don't want to name names, but it rhymes with "crikey." So when I'm done with my industrial espionage on behalf of Reebok—I mean, "taking notes for this column"—I hand Trampas my old shoes, and he fires up the saw in a room dedicated to shoe dissection. A moment later, my old footwear is halved. Surprisingly, they're not filled with magic leprechauns, flubber and banshee breath, as marketing campaigns might have you believe.

In addition to the awesomeness of having a guy with a doctorate degree sever my shoes like some kind of shop-class miscreant, this exercise is economically fruitful. Because now I need shoes, which means that someone in Maine will make another pair. Then that Skowheganite has money to buy something he or she needs, like Truck Nutz or Allen's Coffee Flavored Brandy. Friggin' Skowhegan. Probably doesn't even have a cow pound. ✖✖✖

ACTING UP

The deceptive allure of the silver screen

Promised land?

FOR YEARS, YOUNG PEOPLE graduated from college and, sooner or later, gravitated to New York. Nowadays, more and more, that destination is Los Angeles, specifically Hollywood. Acting is one the most difficult professions in which to achieve success. An actor friend of mine once said to me, "Here's the deal. You win the Academy Award tonight. Next morning you wake up and wonder, 'Am I ever gonna work again?'" Character actor Rod Steiger once told a producer for whom I was writing a script, "People see me shuffling around on the sidewalks of Beverly Hills, and they ask me, 'What are you doing these days?' I tell them, 'Every Monday I get up from bed determined to go out there and let them know I'm still alive.'"

The first real actor I ever met was one of my roommates in college. He was James MacArthur, the son of Helen Hayes, America's greatest stage actress at the time. MacArthur was the kind of guy who was fun to have at a party. Not long into my sophomore year, he was at a mixer at some junior girl's college and fell in love with the rum punch. He thought it would be a great idea to pull a fire extinguisher off the wall and spray the revelers. But the people he sprayed included two security guards, who were not amused. MacArthur was asked to leave college for a time-out. He said to me, "Who the hell needs college? I made $12,000 last summer [which is like $84,000 today], and I wore Indian war paint to boot. I'm making more than the deans of the college. Have fun in the library." He made his first movie that summer and never did come back to school. Eventually, he starred as Dano in the original Hawaii Five-0.

He once invited me to a play opening in Boston that starred his mother and a young British actor named Richard Burton. We went to the cast party at the old Ritz, my roommates already loose from nipping at the contents of MacArthur's flask. The cast members immediately jumped into the party booze, Burton with particular gusto. He had a magical voice that commanded attention and a presence that seemed impossible to resist. From the first minutes of the celebration, he sat in an armchair with his drink. He pulled a young actress, the ingenue, onto his lap, alternating sipping from his glass, holding forth with opinion, and kissing the young woman. "I'm a Welshman," he said. "Welshmen have the best singing voices." He tapped his head, "Smart. We can sing, drink, act and make love." He waved away any food offered and kept his glass full. I hovered around him, particularly after Helen Hayes told us in her lovely way, "He will be, if he controls himself, one of the greatest actors ever."

I remember, other than the drinking and the kissing, two things he said. "I discovered Dylan Thomas, fell in love with his stuff. Welshmen help each other." And, "Walk onto a stage or into a room as if you have something extraordinary to give to everyone there. And will yourself to believe it."

Years later, my friend Harry the producer took my wife and me to Jack Nicholson's house high in the hills off Mulholland Drive. Harry was, and is, a maverick, fleeing the advertising business to "burst the bonds of the East." "I'm nervous and excited," my wife told me on the way there. "Gee," I said, "I'm like that every day." I tried to be cool, but felt like an idiot. Nicholson was a perfect host, pouring us beer, introducing us to his then-girlfriend, Anjelica Huston, and his pal, the actor Harry Dean Stanton, who looked like he had just left the set of a spaghetti western. Their conversation, which my wife and I lamely tried to join, was all about earthquakes, mystics and gurus. I kept going back and forth to the fridge for more beer, building up false courage. My wife nudged me and pointed to Nicholson's feet. He was wearing white formal shoes and no socks. "How cool," she whispered to me.

"The grass is always greener," I replied, wanting to show no weakness in front of Jack.

We left with Harry saying, "It's impossible to have a movie star as a friend. Nothing turns them on more than unreality." This was more than 30 years ago. Today, still a producer to his core, he says, "Actors are strangers in a strange land. I talked to someone I wanted for a movie, and I asked him about his hobby, painting. 'When I'm changing genres, which I am now, I cannot talk about painting. Won't talk, don't talk.' See what I mean?" Harry adds, "All these people want is to rise above all of us. Sad, really, to have a sense that, in many ways, there is no reality to them. Only the pursuit of the next role."

My friend, Gail Strickland, is a wonderful actress who has appeared in numerous movies, TV shows and on stage. I asked about the acting profession, and she gave me a wry smile. "Here's the fate of so many actresses," she said. "A big producer called my agent and said, 'I didn't call you looking for Gail Strickland. I called you looking for a Gail Strickland type.'"

Gail shook her head. "It's still nowhere near as bad as being a writer in Hollywood. There's an old joke: 'Did you hear about the actress who was so stupid she slept with a writer?'"

I've got to think about that one. ✖✖✖ my world, the term "Private Event" is used quite often. Many establishments offer it as a service, but few of them truly understand what it takes to create a meaningful social experience. At Strega Waterfront, it's at the core of who we are.

hat makes a private event memorable? The idea is simple: Let the conversation, laughter and inspiring moments between guests become the real focus of the assembly.

rest is our job. The artistry and thoughtful presentation of the food and wine. The careful craftsmanship of every drink. he subtle adjustments to the climate, lighting and mood. The masterful planning and close collaboration with the host.

The details. The details. The details. This is what we do.

You bring the moments. We'll help turn them into memories.

TAKE 5

The School of Sports { RICH LEVINE }

ON JACOBY, JD AND THE GREAT STEVE WILLIAMS

PITCHING IN Bedard aims to have an impact.

5 LATE SOX STORYLINES

The MVP A lot can (and will) happen, but right now the MVP award is Jacoby Ellsbury's to lose. A few more solid weeks from Ells and it won't be a question of whether he wins, but rather how much the award will cost Boston in negotiations. Somewhere out there, agent Scott Boras just read this and snorted into his gold coffee mug (filled with human blood).

The LVP Carl Crawford's secretly hurt or suddenly old. Those are the only acceptable explanations at this stage in the season. What else could it be? A five-month slump? I hope there comes a day when I'll regret writing this, but for now, that seven-year deal's giving me a vicious not-so-fresh feeling. (What? You thought I'd go an issue without killing the guy?)

The Grand Finale Despite countless hours of both silent and very public prayer, I can't shake the feeling that JD Drew's headed for another stint as the starting right fielder. Personally, I think that's crazy. Give me Josh Reddick every night until Drew's contract withers up and dies, and I'll be a happy, happy man. Happier than Drew's ever been, I assume.

The Third Starter Neither guy will replace Clay Buchholz, but either John Lackey or Erik Bedard needs to emerge as a reliable No. 3. Right now I'd go with Lackey, but he's still slightly unstable. (He'll probably blame his next loss on me for writing that.) In the end, Bedard's quiet consistency could be the key.

The Closers We've spent the last two years waiting for Daniel Bard and Jonathan Papelbon to find a simultaneous rhythm out of the pen, and what better time than now? Oh right, the playoffs. But after what you've seen this year, you've got to feel good about the second season. Although, one more reliever would be nice. What do you say, Clay? Maybe a few innings to keep the back loose?

ONE ON THE OTHER MANNING

Before you pile on Eli Manning for saying that he's "in the same class" as Tom Brady, consider this: Last season, Manning threw 25 interceptions. Brady's thrown 25 interceptions TOTAL since 2006. OK, now you can pile on.

4 DATES TO WATCH

8/30: The Yankees visit Fenway for the last time this season. That's right folks, only three games and 20 hours of baseball before we say goodbye... for now.

9/1: Got a fetish for fourth-stringers? Tonight's your night, perv. Giants vs. Pats: The preseason finale.

9/3: It's "Opening Saturday" in College Football. (I was paid $50,000 to not make a Miami joke.)

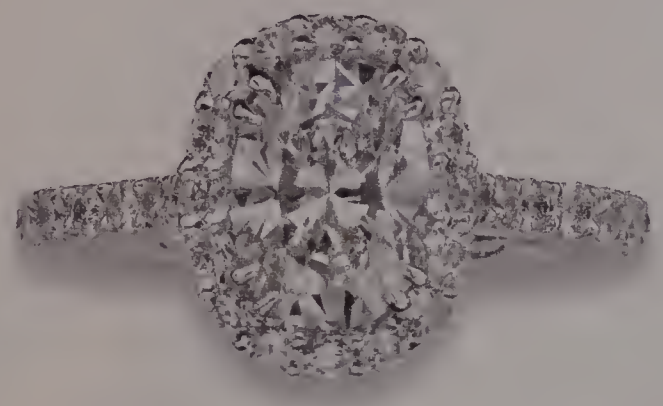
SEND FEEDBACK TO RICH@IMPROPER.COM AND READ MORE AT CSNNE.COM.

2 NFL ISSUES

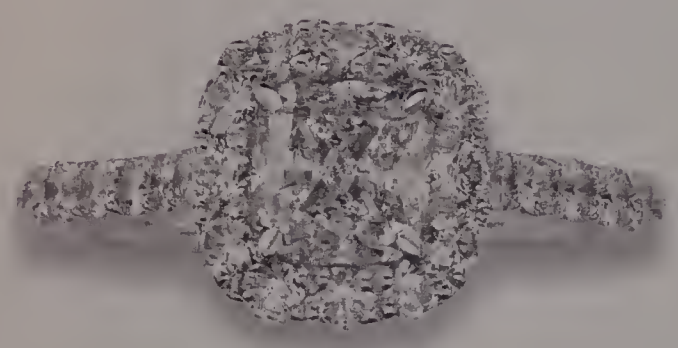
KO Kickoffs The new NFL kickoff rule (the ball's now marked at the 35-yard-line, instead of the 30) will drastically affect special teams. We'll see deeper kicks, fewer returns and far less fun. Yay! But here's my question: How about a do-over on Super Bowl XXXI? Let's see how great Desmond Howard is when you tack on five extra yards (especially now that he's 41).

Replay Redo Another off-season rule change means that every close play in the end zone is now reviewable. If you watched the Pats first preseason game, you're terrified for the future. Muscly-armed Ed Hochuli spent more time with his head in the zebra booth than he did on the field. More reviews mean more commercials. More commercials mean... more Coors Light ads.

3 PRESEASON PATS THOUGHTS



On the U Does anyone actually care what happened with Vince Wilfork at Miami? Good, I didn't think so. Honestly, I'm sick of people acting so outraged by this story. Is it unfortunate? Yeah. But the Miami mess isn't like Tiger's sexcapades or Donaghy's gambling ring. We've always known that stuff like this was going on and will continue to do so.



You Never Know The world was quick to kill rumors about Albert Haynesworth and Chad Ochocinco getting cut, and I was right there with them; I don't think either guy's headed for an early exit. But as I've said before, nothing shocks me with Belichick. He could cut Big Al and Ocho tomorrow, and I wouldn't bat an eyelash. (Fine, maybe one.)

Arriving at Logan There was a time when you were more likely to catch Belichick topless at practice than to see Logan Mankins and the Pats play nice in the negotiation room. But now that the deal is done, good luck finding anyone who's unhappy that the Mustachioed Marauder's here for the long haul. Logan's a rock. An insanely expensive rock, but a rock nonetheless.

"This new guy playing basketball named Michael Jordan started wearing shorts past his knees."

Soroff On DAYMOND JOHN

The fashion marketing guru talks about LL Cool J, Bethenny Frankel and the secret to branding success.

CLOTHING MOGUL DAYMOND JOHN is the founder of FUBU and a pioneer in marketing hip-hop culture. A native of Hollis, Queens, he entered the apparel business when he wanted a hat he'd seen in a music video but couldn't find one at an affordable price. Having picked up sewing from his mother, he started making his own. Broadening the line to include jerseys, sweatshirts and T-shirts, his business reached a tipping point when LL Cool J wore FUBU for a promotional campaign. Two years ago, John signed on with the ABC show Shark Tank, on which he and four other prominent businesspeople hear pitches from contestants hoping to launch their brands. John is a consultant, speaker and the author of Display of Power and The Brand Within. This fall, he'll serve as Babson College's "Entrepreneur in Residence." He lives in New York.

Jonathan Soroff: Should Hollis, Queens, officially be named the birthplace of hip-hop?
Daymond John: No. The Bronx could be considered the pilgrims, and then we could be seen as the settlers. Pioneers get slaughtered, and the settlers prosper. The guys in the Bronx started things, and we colonized it.

You worked at Red Lobster. Favorite dish?
The free ones. Back then, times were hard, so I would not only work, but I'd have three meals and I'd take home the leftovers.

Does FUBU really stand for "For us, by us," or is there some secret message?
It really does stand for that. The question is: Who was the us?

OK, who was the us?
It sparked from hip-hop culture, but it was a time and an era when this new guy playing basketball named Michael Jordan started wearing shorts past his knees, and a boxer with a gold tooth named Mike Tyson was the youngest in history to attain the title and started listening to hip-hop. It was this culture that even the Japanese kids were picking up on.

Is the secret to branding capturing and encapsulating a zeitgeist or community?
Providing the people who aren't represented with something they can call their own. Sure. The geeks working over at Apple—it became cool to be one of those guys, and they're part of a movement, for example.

Did LL Cool J make your brand?
I think he was a very, very important part of my brand. Yes.

Thoughts on Abercrombie & Fitch?
I love them. There are several reasons I think they're successful. One is that they have very racy ads that either represent alternative lifestyles or a younger culture. The stores set a mood; you think you're in a club. Their fragrance they've skillfully branded in every mall. Whether you know it or not, you smell it and think of them. Their price point is great, and the product is super high-quality. The cut of their clothes is flattering to almost everyone. Great customer service. On many to all levels, they've got it down.

Who's your favorite designer right now?
I'm really a Dolce & Gabbana fan. I think G-Star has come back around with their denim. And of course, my brand.

How many pairs of shoes do you own?
A hundred. Give or take.

Favorite hip-hop act of all time?
Oh, man, that's a tough one! Could be Eric B. and Rakim, or Biggie Smalls. I don't know. That's like asking me my favorite child.

Is there a business you'd not be involved in?
It all depends on the involvement. For the most part, pornography isn't something I want to be involved in.

Unless you're starring in it?
[Laughs.] Yeah. But for the sake of argument, with someone like Jenna Jameson a couple of years ago, for example, if there was a great apparel line to be done. But no business that jeopardizes people's safety or dignity. I'd never get involved with tobacco.

In business, is marketing everything?
Yes.

So what makes a FUBU hoody better than one from Old Navy?
The price point. Old Navy is a product where the consumer has a need for it but no desire or ability to spend a lot of money on it, whereas FUBU is going to be more about a lifestyle, as well as better quality.

Any thoughts on Bethenny Frankel?
She's done an amazing job. She's shown that being focused and having a clear strategy is great. Developing a team around you, and a concept that no one else is addressing, is great. That not just A-list celebrities are the successful ones. People relate to people who are going through everyday challenges.

Do ladies really love Cool James?
Yeah. I can't tell you how many times I've been with him and a woman walks up with either his name or face tattooed on her body.

Who's the shark you like the most?
I like every single one of them, but for different reasons. I love [Mark] Cuban, who he is, his attitude. And because of his extreme wealth, I can find ways to snake deals from him. I love Kevin O'Leary, because whether you like what he says or not, he's telling the truth in some way.

Is he the richest of the crew?
No. Mark Cuban is. I love Barbara [Corcoran] because she's crazy, sexy and cool. I like every one of them for certain reasons, and I hate every one of them for certain reasons.

So is the show fun to do?
Extremely. The challenge is that after the lights go down, you've got a dozen green entrepreneurs to deal with, and lawyers, and due diligence and all that. That's where it becomes real work.

Stupidest idea anyone's presented?
The guy who wanted to surgically implant Bluetooth into people's necks. ✖✖✖

A GOOD VINTAGE

THREE TIMES A YEAR, the quiet town of Brimfield transforms into a wheeling and dealing metropolis. With a quarter million visitors and about 6,000 dealers, the Brimfield Antique and Collectibles Show is Antiques Roadshow meets Hoarders, set in a New England backdrop of rolling hills and apple orchards. Notorious for its unwieldy layout, the show sports vendors hawking everything from cheap tchotkes to fine art. Home furnishings remain the big draw, but vintage clothing retailers have been making more of a mark in recent years. Trends include shabby chic and "upcycled" fashion, or repurposed, recycled items. And if you're looking for something that makes a statement, try antique rural garb or vintage eyewear dating back to 1730. JEFFREY CATTELL

Jump Right In

Back in the Saddle The Boston Park Rangers Mounted Unit has far outlived other government equestrian programs (rest in peace, Pony Express), but after patrolling the Emerald Necklace for nearly two decades, the troop faces possible disbandment. This year's Putnam Boston Equestrian Classic Preview Party doubles as a fund-raiser for the group, bringing a rooftop cocktail party to the Taj Hotel on Aug. 25. If you can't make it for drinks, head to the Boston Common earlier in the day, where they'll be horsing around in a jump exhibition. Jeffrey Cattel

Altered States

Bess Yet The Gershwin brothers' original folk opera, Porgy and Bess, debuted at the Colonial Theatre in 1935 before taking its place on Broadway and in the cultural canon. The American Repertory Theater brings Catfish Row back to the Hub with Suzan-Lori Parks and Diane Paulus' reworking, which splices standards like "Summertime" into big numbers performed by an all-star cast including Audra McDonald and Norm Lewis (pictured above at a recent rehearsal). Through Oct. 2, you can catch the show in Cambridge before the production relocates to Broadway for a January premiere.

Capsules by Sean Burns

Captain America: The First Avenger ★★★ ½ Just when I thought I never wanted to see another superhero movie, the summer's most delightful surprise arrives with this cornball throwback in which local boy Chris Evans finally makes good. At the start of World War II, Evans' digitally-shrunken weakling Steve Rogers gets injected with a superserum that transforms him into a shining beacon of War Bond propaganda. Captain America is overflowing with a gee-whiz sense of wonder and gorgeously retro set designs. The movie is as square as Evans' jaw, but that only adds to the charm. The Nazis now have rocket ships and laser guns, and each individual sepia-toned set-piece is overscaled with pulp abandon. Director Joe Johnston's eager-to-please naiveté hasn't really found a home in blockbuster-land since 1991's The Rocketeer, but this is the right material for the right filmmaker. From here on out, every superhero movie needs to have Tommy Lee Jones on the sidelines, barking insults the way only Tommy Lee Jones can. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Cowboys & Aliens ★ ½ I just had to travel back in time to break the news to my nine-year-old self that James Bond and Indiana Jones teaming up to fight space-lizards in the Old West isn't the awesomest movie in the history of the world. Boasting five credited screenwriters, a raft of story-by credits and bearing little resemblance to the comic book from which it takes its title, director John Favreau's misjudged genre-bender treats a schlocky premise with humorless solemnity. Daniel Craig's Man With No Name wakes up with an alien bracelet and no memory, earning the ire of Harrison Ford's crusty cattle baron. Then UFO's attack, leaving the two to out-gruff each other and start a posse to rescue everyone from a spaceship. The movie is grindingly violent, and it unforgivably refuses to remark upon the irony of white settlers having to team up with an Apache tribe to rescue their land from an occupying force seeking to pilfer resources and commit genocide. (At Boston Common, Fenway and the suburbs.)

Crazy, Stupid, Love ★★★ Unlike other freaky-deaky method actors like Sean Penn and Nicolas Cage, Ryan Gosling happens to look like a movie star, and this too-carefully structured romantic comedy benefits immeasurably from his brand of anarchy. Backing up a bit, the film stars Steve Carell (who also produced) as a middle-aged husband unceremoniously dropped by his childhood sweetheart (Julianne Moore) after she's had an ill-advised dalliance with a co-worker (a smarmy-as-ever Kevin Bacon). Adrift and alone for the first time in his life, Carell takes up residence on a barstool at a demographically unfriendly singles' haunt. The self-pity is enough to interrupt Gosling's idle rich, bar-cruising lothario, and the following makeover is at first a dizzying sort of Pygmalion. Sadly, Crazy, Stupid, Love can't sustain that level of manic invention and eventually settles into something more conventional, but pleasant all the same. Luckily, by then we're invested enough in these characters to cheer for the feel-good ending. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Friends With Benefits ★★★ Didn't we just see this movie? January's No Strings Attached starred charmless Ashton Kutcher exhibiting zero chemistry with Natalie Portman in a tale of two ridiculously good-looking 20-somethings foolishly attempting to enjoy one another's bodies without any of that pesky love stuff getting in the way. A mere six months later, we've got Justin Timberlake and Mila Kunis starring as two ridiculously good-looking 20-somethings foolishly attempting to enjoy one another's bodies without any of that pesky love stuff getting in the way. You can probably guess what happens, yet Friends With Benefits is delightful all the same. Directed by Easy A's Will Gluck, it's a sexy, funny and very familiar picture, carried off by an effervescent atmosphere and some phenomenal chemistry between these two stars. In other words, it's the singers, not the song. I know there's a great joke in here somewhere about Kunis pulling a Black Swan and stealing Portman's role, but frankly I was too charmed by this picture to try and sort it out. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Guard ★★★ ½ Suffused with a strain of romantic Irish fatalism, writer/director John Michael McDonagh's debut plunders the clichés of a thousand interracial buddy-cop comedies, emerging with an ode to shabby nobility that's stranger and sadder than expected. It's also fookin' hilarious—or at least that's how Sergeant Gerry Boyle might describe it. Played by Brendan Gleeson in one of the great performances

Strong performances downplay stereotypes.

The Help ★★
Starring Emma Stone, Viola Davis, Bryce Dallas Howard, Octavia Spencer, Jessica Chastain, Allison Janney and Cicely Tyson. Based on the novel by Kathryn Stockett. Written and directed by Tate Taylor. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

HERE'S THE HARD PART of this job.

Already the surprise smash of these late-August dog days, The Help is currently being enjoyed by a large audience that has gone sadly underserved by the months-long barrage of superheroes and giant robots that typically define summer entertainment. On one hand, we should rejoice, as this is a female-driven picture with no special effects based on a novel instead of a comic book. There are also two large juicy parts for African-American actresses of a certain age, a demographic that has been entirely missing from this summer's movies, unless you count Angela Bassett's nothing role in Green Lantern. (Personally, I don't.)

But it's a troubling picture all the same.

Based on Kathryn Stockett's out-of-nowhere best seller, which according to legend was rejected by some 60 publishers and agents before finally spending over 100 weeks on The New York Times Best Sellers List, the movie version was entrusted to the author's best friend, a novice filmmaker named Tate Taylor. Extremely well-acted, The Help is strictly amateur hour production-wise, displaying all the cinematic brio of a Hallmark Hall of Fame special. It's overlong, sloppily staged and carried on the backs of some very fine actresses and an undeniably compelling story.

It's also a work of fiction, safely ensconced within the phoniest of Hollywood traditions. At the end of the day, The Help just wants you to leave the theater feeling good about yourself. Not an ignoble goal for a summer movie, but one that left me rather queasy, considering the subject matter.

In case you haven't heard already, The Help takes place in Jackson, Miss., circa 1962, when coltish tomboy Skeeter Phelan (Emma Stone) graduates from Ole Miss, returns home to her family's expansive plantation and has an ideological falling-out with her well-to-do childhood friends in the Junior League. Led by Bryce Dallas Howard's Hilly Holbrook—a smiling vision of evil tormented by nightmares of colored folks using her bathroom—these bridge clubs and antebellum balls are often interrupted by outbursts of obscene racism directed toward the social circle's patient, kindly maids.

Skeeter, being a wildly anachronistic audience surrogate, is appalled. With aspirations of a career in journalism, she begins the slow process of taking down testimony from these brutally treated housekeepers, working at below minimum wage and raising spoiled white children as their own, only to be callously dehumanized at every turn. It's a horrible way to go through life, and if The Help is indeed worthwhile, it's only because this country seems to be once again backsliding into willful ignorance to history's hard lessons. It's worth remembering that those appalling Jim Crow laws aren't as far in the rearview mirror as we'd often like to pretend.

The most stirring tales come from Viola Davis' Aibileen, a long-suffering servant with eyes of hardened steel. Davis is an extraordinary actress who can say more with a stare than her peers can muster in an entire monologue. She is bruised but proud, trying to make the best of an impossible situation. She does remarkable work in a movie that isn't quite up to the task of handling it.

Because ultimately The Help turns out to be a slightly icky wish-fulfillment fantasy, allowing white audiences to rally around Skeeter's do-gooder activism while rendering her racist peers as cartoon monsters. Bryce Dallas Howard does everything that was asked and more as the grotesque Hilly. She's so spectacularly villainous, there's no chance we could even remotely understand how such behavior was ever considered acceptable in America. She might as well be tying babies to the train tracks.

Howard receives her comeuppance via poop jokes. Dozens of them, actually. Disturbingly scatologically obsessed, The Help is so overrun with bad gags about toilets and eating feces that there must be something Freudian happening here.

Kudos to Octavia Spencer, beginning the film as a buffoonish comic-relief stereotype only to gradually invest her sassy-mammy character with warmth and dignity while she works for Jessica Chastain (a long way from The Tree of Life), playing a drunk, white-trash housewife also ostracized by Howard's harridans. The problem with Hollywood is that Davis and Spencer could only hope to score roles this meaty if they're playing maids.

You know there's an ugly equivalency going on when Skeeter's troubles landing a boyfriend gets more screen-time than the assassination of Medgar Evers. The Help's eventual crowd-pleasing triumph is entirely fictitious and is honestly unthinkable considering the time and place in which the film is set.

It's a very pleasant lie, sending you out of the cinema on a high note. But what vexes me is why the lie even needed to be told in the first place. Aren't there enough true stories of heroism during the civil rights era? Is it really appropriate for us to all stand up and applaud this courageous, fictional white girl? ✖✖✖ of his career. Boyle's a steely-eyed lout, whiling away the hours in a state of perpetual boredom and wasted disappointment, punctuated by occasional visits from Dublin prostitutes. But when a gang of English cocaine traffickers arrive in town, so does a smooth-talking Southern dandy from the FBI (Don Cheadle, master of the reaction shot). Turns out that, like a plus-sized version of every great Humphrey Bogart and Clint Eastwood character, there's a strict moral code lurking somewhere beneath Boyle's anti-social dissolution. The Guard is raw, profane and strangely moving. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, Part II

★★★ In keeping with the slavish, Classics Illustrated film-to-screen transcriptions preferred by the ravenous fan base, the latest Harry Potter picture doesn't quite hold up as a movie of its own. This series has been dogged from day one by a preaching-to-the-choir mentality and an unwillingness to adapt to any real cinematic structure. BBC director David Yates (who helmed the final four installments) has an eye for spectacle and a bent towards TV-miniseries dramaturgy. It's nearly impossible for us muggles to even remotely understand what's happening anymore. But this final Potter movie flaunts an undeniable pop-apocalyptic grandeur, and it's finally got a freakin' ending. Ralph Fiennes' noseless Voldemort keeps getting beat down by the upstart kids and their magical gobbledygook. With all the exposition dumps having taken place during the previous picture, we're now just watching one bloody payoff and epic battle sequence after another. I had no idea what was going on most of the time, but it's rather thrilling all the same. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Horrible Bosses ★★ A ramshackle assembly of recycled characters and conflicting tones duct-taped together at odd angles, director Seth Gordon's contribution to the summer of R-rated comedy squanders a wonderfully relatable premise: Who hasn't dreamed of murdering his employer at one point or another? Jasons Bateman and Sudeikis, along with It's Always Sunny in Philadelphia's ace screamer Charlie Day, star as middle-aged schlubs terrorized by irrational supervisors. Taking terrible advice from a "murder consultant" (Jamie Foxx), these sad-sacks dream up a triple-homicide conspiracy that—much like Horrible Bosses itself—never really makes it past the idea phase. The screenplay feels like a first draft, suffering from a crippling lack of consistency and the delusion that dirty words are, in and of themselves, hilarious. The characterizations of our leads are sketchy at best, relying on shorthand from previous roles. The movie can't quite figure out a way to get all three bosses into the same scenario, or even the same comic universe. It feels like channel-surfing. (In the suburbs.)

Magic Trip: Ken Kesey's Search for a Kool Place ★ Here we go again. Charting Ken Kesey's decline from brilliant novelist to drug-addled dullard, directors Alex Gibney and Alison Ellwood have cobbled together hundreds of hours of unwatchable footage from the Merry Band of Pranksters' 1964 cross-country voyage, already immortalized in Tom Wolfe's The Electric Kool-Aid Acid Test. After setting the literary world on fire with One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest and Sometimes a Great Notion, Kesey hooked up with a bunch of similarly minded hippies, painted a school bus with Day-Glo colors and hit the road, pausing in random places to dance in the woods. With legendary Neal Cassady (Jack Kerouac's inspiration for On the Road's Dean Moriarty) at the wheel, this pointless bus trip has become a totem of boomer nostalgia and myth. But finally seeing all this raw, barely-shaped footage, absent the grandeur of Wolfe's prose, it's just a bunch of boring acid-heads who never shut up. Torture. (At Kendall Square.)

Midnight in Paris ★★★ ½ I know. Everyone always tells you that the new one is Woody Allen's comeback film. I've been burned by that rap, too. But this is a lighter-than-air, casually profound piece that calls to mind The Purple Rose of Cairo in its magical realism and ruefully funny undercurrents. Owen Wilson stars as a hack Hollywood screenwriter vacationing in Paris who finds himself magically transported to the 1920s, where he boozes it up with Ernest Hemingway, F. Scott Fitzgerald and Adrien Brody's hilariously self-infatuated Salvador Dalí. The punchline comes early: While Wilson was always pining for "the good old days," once he gets there, he discovers that everybody else shares his longing. Gorgeously shot by cinematographer Daris Khondji and directed by Allen with a care we haven't seen in eons, it's a deceptively slight exploration of nostalgia as beautiful quicksand. The only thing keeping this from being a classic is Allen's typically misogynistic treatment of Rachel McAdams' character. Otherwise, it's lovely. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Sarah's Key ★ ½ Isn't it a little early in the year for an Oscar-grubbing Holocaust movie? Working from the novel by Tatiana De Rosnay, director Gilles Paquet-Brenner follows spiky journalist Kristin Scott Thomas and family, who move into a fashionable Parisian apartment owned for half the century by her bourgeois in-laws. With the real estate market being what it was back in 1942, how did these folks ever score such a fancy flat? Well, it turns out the liquidation of France's Jewish ghetto was somehow involved, and we're sent on an ever-misleading string of flashbacks and seemingly sinister family ties that all basically revolve around one pushy reporter feeling guilty that she married into money. Exploitative to a fault, the second storyline follows our title character as she tries to escape the camps and rescue a kid brother who she locked in this particular apartment's closet. At least the ghastly payoff is left offscreen, but there's no excuse for this dour film to march onward for another hour after that. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

30 Minutes or Less ★★ This underachieving riff on 1980s buddy-action comedies stars The Social Network's Jesse Eisenberg as a slacker pizza delivery guy blackmailed into robbing a bank after a couple of drunken ne'er do wells (Danny McBride and Nick Swardson) strap a bomb to his chest. Vaguely distasteful, as the picture was inspired by a true 2003 case in which a middle-aged drug addict exploded in front of news crews, Zombieland director Ruben Fleischer's sophomore effort devotes the bulk of its slender 83-minute running time to undisciplined improvisation. Unfortunately, a little of Danny McBride goes a very long way, and too much of the picture is wasted letting the clock run out. Parks and Recreation's Aziz Ansari seems particularly out of his league, but, bless his heart, Eisenberg gives a bona fide performance here, as if aiming for another Oscar nomination while everybody else just clowns around. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Transformers: Dark of the Moon ★ To say this is the best Transformers movie isn't saying much. The picture surpasses its notorious forebears by being visually accomplished, occasionally coherent and nowhere near as jaw-droppingly racist as the two films that came before. Am I damning with faint praise? Well, it's also mind-numbingly boring. Some folks have been applauding Dark of the Moon's final reels, a solid (no kidding) hour of rock'em, sock'em fighting robots, toppling skyscrapers and city-wide devastation on a scale never seen before in movies. Personally, I was so bored I wanted to take a nap. Hamstrung by the constraints of 3-D technology, Bay finally has to hold a shot for more than three seconds and plan out his action sequences. But he still has no idea how to pace a scene. There are no stakes, and the action never rises or falls. There's just one single note of sensory overload. After 15 minutes of this I was checking my watch; a half hour later I was rolling my eyes. (In the suburbs.)

The Tree of Life ★★★ ½ "Other people make movies; Terrence Malick builds cathedrals," my brilliant colleague Matt Zoller Seitz is fond of saying. This dream project for the director, some 30 years in the making, feels like the ultimate expression of Malick's particular worldview. With even the title flirting with self-parody, the picture seeks to reconcile one child's troubled upbringing in the 1950s with the entire history of the universe. It is by turns rapturous, astonishing and occasionally silly. I adore the ambition and am in awe of the accomplishment, even if I'm still not sure it all hangs together. Taking the form of a whispered prayer to a God who may or may not be listening, the fractured narrative unspools in symphonic movements. But after one viewing, I'm still not convinced that Malick is quite able to reconcile the quotidian with the cosmic. His final, surreal sequence on a mystical beach is unfortunate. But good heavens, the film is a wonder to behold. Malick's reach exceeds his grasp—but that is one hell of a reach. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

WHO'S NEXT

Roger Daltrey rediscovers his voice in a new staging of Tommy.

Roger Daltrey plays at Agganis Arena on Sept. 17.

EVEN BEFORE THE Who passed retirement age, Roger Daltrey faced the irony of singing bandmate Pete Townshend's lyric "Hope I die before I get old." But with Townshend losing his hearing and Daltrey almost losing his voice, mortality has crept up on the survivors of one of rock's mightiest groups.

Yet Daltrey's far from throwing in the towel. "I don't feel any older than I did when I was 22," says the 67-year-old, who credits Boston physician Steven Zeitels for removing a precancerous growth from his vocal cords in December 2009. "By now I'm on the last rung of the ladder. How long this is going to last I don't know, but I'm loving every minute of it."

This year, Daltrey's been performing the Who's seminal 1969 work Tommy in its

I DRANK WHEN I WAS A TEEN AND I CAME OUT ALL RIGHT. THEY'RE GOING TO DRINK NO MATTER WHAT I SAY.
I DON'T WANT TO BE UNPOPULAR. I DON'T WANT TO PUT PRESSURE ON HER. I AM SURE HE'LL GROW OUT OF IT.
I DON'T WANT TO MAKE THINGS BETWEEN US WORSE THAN THEY ALREADY ARE. I DON'T WANT TO BE A NAG.
I DON'T WANT TO BE A PARTY POOPER. I DON'T WANT TO SEE IT. I DON'T WANT TO CRAMP HER STYLE.
I WAS YOUNG ONCE TOO. I DRANK WHEN I WAS A TEEN AND I CAME OUT ALL RIGHT. THEY'RE GOING TO DRINK NO MATTER WHAT I SAY.
I AM SCARED SHE WON'T LIKE ME ANYMORE. I DON'T WANT TO BE UNPOPULAR. I DON'T WANT TO PUT PRESSURE ON HER.
I AM SURE HE'LL GROW OUT OF IT. IT'S JUST A PASSING PHASE. HE ALREADY HARDLY TALKS TO ME AS IT IS.
HE NEEDS TO HAVE FUN. IN ONE EAR AND OUT THE OTHER. OTHER PARENTS LET THEIR KIDS DO IT.
I DON'T WANT TO BE A NAG. I DON'T WANT TO BE A PARTY POOPER. I DON'T WANT TO SEE IT.
I DON'T WANT TO CRAMP HER STYLE. I WAS YOUNG ONCE TOO. I DRANK WHEN I WAS A TEEN AND I CAME OUT ALL RIGHT entirety. It's a concept he premiered at a March benefit for his Teenage Cancer Trust in London and extended with a U.S. tour that hits Agganis Arena on Sept. 17.

"I've gone back to the original Tommy of the record, which has never really been explored in the live arena," he says. The Who was limited in reproducing its vocals live, but Daltrey has the band to handle the task with musical director Frank Simes and Townshend's brother Simon on guitars, Loren Gold on keyboards, Jon Button on bass and Scott Deavours on drums.

A double album hailed as the first rock opera, Tommy was produced by the Who's manager Kit Lambert, whose father was a classical composer. "For its time, it was so inventive, and it's classical in a sense," Daltrey says from his home in Sussex, England. "It might be narratively light, but structurally and musically, it's much more of an opera than I ever realized."

Beyond the well-worn hits "Pinball Wizard" and "See Me, Feel Me," Townshend's song cycle about a deaf, dumb and blind kid's spiritual journey wove an unusual tapestry. Some songs took a jaunty, vaudevillian air while Keith Moon's cascading drum fills echoed timpani in the moody, 10-minute "Underture."

"Before that, pop music as such had never been anything other than a three-minute single," Daltrey says. "That was great to explore, to be given a canvas to sound on. Did it change the world? No. But like all good music, it could help people through a bad day. At the moment, Tommy is especially suited to these times because I think people are screaming, 'See me, feel me, touch me, heal me,' because we feel so adrift in society."

In the second half of his show, Daltrey includes Who favorites "Baba O'Riley" and "My Generation" as well as rarities "Going Mobile" (which the Who never played live) and "Pictures of Lily." He's also likely to sing something by his idol Johnny Cash. "He did his best work at the end of his life," Daltrey says of Cash. "Musicians should play 'til they drop."

Two of his Who bandmates did just that. First was Moon, who passed out over his kit at a 1976 Boston Garden concert and died of a sedative overdose two years later. Bassist John Entwistle died of a cocaine-induced heart attack just before a 2002 tour.

Guitarist Townshend still fights deafness. "The last thing in the world I would want is to take away the last bit of his hearing by doing a stupid tour," Daltrey says. "He gets into the mood and it takes him over, and that's when he does the damage."

Townshend, who reportedly wants the Who to tour its 1973 rock opera Quadrophenia next year, made a Tommy cameo in England. Asked how it feels to perform onstage without him, Daltrey says, "I always live within the music anyway." Still, he continues, "He's present in every note that I play of a Who song, and it's the same with John and Keith. The noise they made in their lifetimes still echoes today. As soon as I get onstage and we start playing this music, in my head, they're back." ✖✖✖

Broad Spectrum

Snappy Medium As its name might suggest, TV on the Radio offers an inventive melange of multigenre music. The Brooklyn band, made up of quirky Bohemians, artisans and wordsmiths, has released four critically acclaimed albums since forming more than a decade ago. Their latest album, Nine Types of Light, combines post-punk edginess with pulsing electric beats and jazzy, soul-inspired riffs. Tune in to see and hear the spectacle on Sept. 6 at Bank of America Pavilion.

Urban Scrawl

Street Smarts

With their culture, diversity and ambient chatter, the streets of Boston can be overwhelming and exciting. Nick Z. captures the urban experience in his mural painting "The Many." Using figurative shapes, the former street artist confronts collectivity and identity formation as they relate to society and the city environment. Take a look at the bigger picture at Northeastern University's Gallery 360 through Oct. 28.

Out to Sea

Man Overboard

Everyone has their virtues and faults, but the characters in Lawrence Douglas' latest novel, The Vices, tend to embrace the latter. After Oliver Vice vanishes from an ocean liner in an apparent suicide, his friend sets out on a dangerous course to investigate the disappearance. The result is a journey through a family's history and a world filled with wealth, art and plenty of dark secrets. Douglas will solve a few of the mysteries on Aug. 31 at Brookline Booksmith. Hilary White

HOT HOTEL ROOF

That's What Friends Are For

OK, so some of the guests weren't exactly spring chickens (I number myself among them). Nevertheless, the Young Friends of the Public Garden's Summer Kickoff Party, held on the rooftop of the Taj, attracted a young-at-heart crowd, as well as damn near every pretty young thing in the city.

Among them: committee member and hat model Kate Pokorny, incorrigible scamp Joshua Janson, the achingly lovely Katherine McCord, grad student Graham Lincoln, blonde bombshell Samantha Strauss, brunette bombshell Charlotte Lewis, the ever-dapper David Wedemeyer, the distinguished David Webster (sporting a loden jacket he just picked up in Austria), the hale and hearty Pete Gori and his colleague from Chicago, Chad Funk, übermensch Josh Zakim, the super-stylish Aaron Pike, threads peddler Riccardo Dallai Jr. and the delightful Hadley Quish, to name a mere smattering.

The elevator doors kept disgorging gorgeousness while the Prosecco flowed and everyone ogled the raffle prizes—among them, a pair of $8,000 diamond earrings.

Grand old man Henry Lee, the organization's founder, expressed delight with the turnout, and everyone appeared to enjoy themselves to the utmost.

The evening's most amusing remark: When one guest was asked why he had gotten involved with the charity, he said, "Because at Christmas, it looks like a drunk four-year-old put up the decorations, and I wanted to do something about it."

And Never the Twain Shall Meet

Pop Quiz: Dancing on the Dock is:

(A) How a drunk Bostonian might pronounce the name of a 1984 Bruce Springsteen hit.

David Wedemeyer, Katherine McCord and Graham Lincoln at Young Friends of the Public Garden

David Webster at Young Friends of the Public Garden

Joshua Janson and the raffle's diamond earrings at Young Friends of the Public Garden

Joan Rosenberg and Jennifer Donaldson at Dancing on the Dock

Molly Schoeck and Leigh Denny at Dancing on the Dock

(B) A party organized by the Esplanade Association.

(C) Both of the above.

If you answered C, you may have been one of the highly attractive people who were drawn to the banks of the Charles for an evening of dinner and dancing on the dock at Community Boating.

Present and accounted for: Back Bay doyenne Jeryl Oristaglio and her other half, Steve, Queen of Cambridge Maggie Gold-Seelig, rum runner Nelse Clarke, attorney-at-large Evan Kushner, the naturally carbonated Lori Sullivan, foxy blonde Leigh Denny, redheaded siren Karen DeTemple, yummy mummies Rachael Goldfarb, Mary Baranski, Joan Rosenberg and Jennifer Donaldson, pied piper Chris Tobeck, North Shore blue blood Gen Tracy and her adoring husband, David Jacobs, yoga goddess Bethany Cantin, bright young thing Chynna Pope and others of an equally glittery ilk.

Following a finger-lickin' good barbecue, it was time to merengue, salsa and otherwise boogie the night away.

Overheard by the bar:

"I'm not on a diet, but I am gluten-free. Glatt gluten-free."

Then there were the friends making plans for the weekend:

"Are you coming to Martha's Vineyard?"

"No, I'll be on Nantucket."

"Oh. My condolences."

Contest of the Month:

The first reader who can correctly guess the identities of the two men wearing matching white Italian driving shoes at Tanglewood will win an Improper Bostonian T-shirt… which you can still wear after Labor Day. ✖✖✖

The IMPROPER

The Next 20 Years

My relationship with The Improper began in 1996, at a urinal in the basement of a dubious bar. Some wag had penned, at precise eye level, the lines, "Top 3 Reasons Not to Wear Doc Martens: 1. Owen Schellenberger. 2. Owen Schellenberger. 3. Owen Schellenberger." Perhaps it was all the Guinness I'd drunk, but I thought this morsel of cruelty showed humor, even wit. So I wrote a pitch to The Improper's managing editor, offering to report on all the barroom graffiti in town. To my surprise, she thought this was a good idea. To my greater surprise, she hired me as an intern. It's not an exaggeration to say that we've grown up together, this magazine and I, although The Improper has matured with more dignity.

Northrop Frye thought that literature evolved through modes, moving from the mythic (about gods), to the romantic (about heroes), the high mimetic (about noblemen), low mimetic (about regular people) and ending in the ironic (about total losers). This magazine is securely in the low-mimetic period, with occasional dips into the ironic. But whither Improper in the next 20 years? We'll continue to publish wry bon mots, dazzling fashion spreads and pictures of socialites. We'll add new columns, like "The Escape Artist," debuting in this issue. These editor's letters will continue to make incongruous references to elephants. We'll keep laughing at Nick "Ladyface" Altschuller. And, of course, we'll achieve complete lifestyle media domination in this world and beyond.

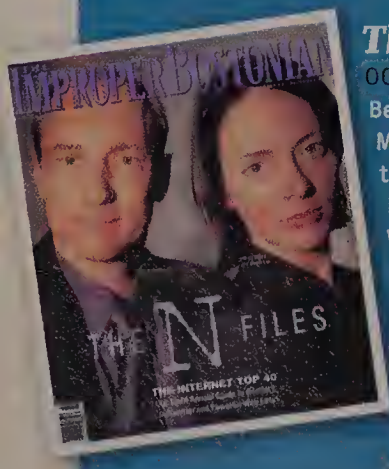
HOME ON THE RANGE

MIGHT BE TIME for a new nickname. Robert "Boston Rob" Mariano has crafted quite a career from exploring the world outside his native Canton. According to Mariano, "the best travel experience happens when you're right on the edge of your comfort zone," which probably wasn't hard to reach while filming Around the World in 80 Ways. Starting Oct. 2 on the History Channel, watch the reality-TV mainstay try to circumnavigate the globe by blimp, fighter jet, ostrich and, his personal favorite, "helicopter waterskiing." Along for the ride is monster-truck driver Dennis Anderson, so expect ground to be covered on 11-foot wheels. Five down, 75 to go. NICK ALTSCHULLER

PAST TIMES

Nancy Gaines, editor of The Improper from 1995–1999, looks back at her most memorable cover stories.



Belle... Letters... Lust

NOVEMBER 22,1995 in what the press dubbed the "Sex-Mail Battle," former lovers, billionaire Bill Koch and model Kate de Castelbajac, were suing each other over whether licentious squabbling, like her calling him "Long Dong Silver," counted as harassment. When The Improper obtained a stash of notes and faxes, The Wall Street Journal and The New York Times took notice.

Queen Julia

MARCH 27, 1996 "Like the Statue of Liberty, The French Chef will stand a long time for American values," wrote Christopher Lydon in this seminal piece. Lydon, the reigning prince of smart talk-radio, examined the complexities of Julia Child through a prism of feminism, power and sensuality. Child so enjoyed the conversation that she only balked a bit at posing in our kitsch-en regalia.

The N Files

OCT. 22, 1997 Tim Berners-Lee and Patti Maes reshaped how the world works. He invented the World Wide Web. She created Firefly, which changed the way we connect with music. At MIT in the mid-'90s they personified the Internet. To get them to sit for interviews was a challenge. To get them to pose for a cover, à la the cerebral, cool X-Files duo, was a feat. The Improper promptly gained new standing among the city's techies.

Good Eats

THINK THIN

Nobody knew better than Jimmy Hamelburg that Brookline needed a new pizza place. So confident was the native son that he renovated the old B&D Deli, furnished it with a state-of-the-art Wood Stone hearth and slapped his name out front. The pizzas at Jimmy's Bar and Oven might best be described as "bar pies," those regional favorites normally found south of the city. Cracker-thin, the chewy crust sports a crispy char and is covered from center to edge with a bright, balanced tomato sauce and salty, bubbly mozzarella.

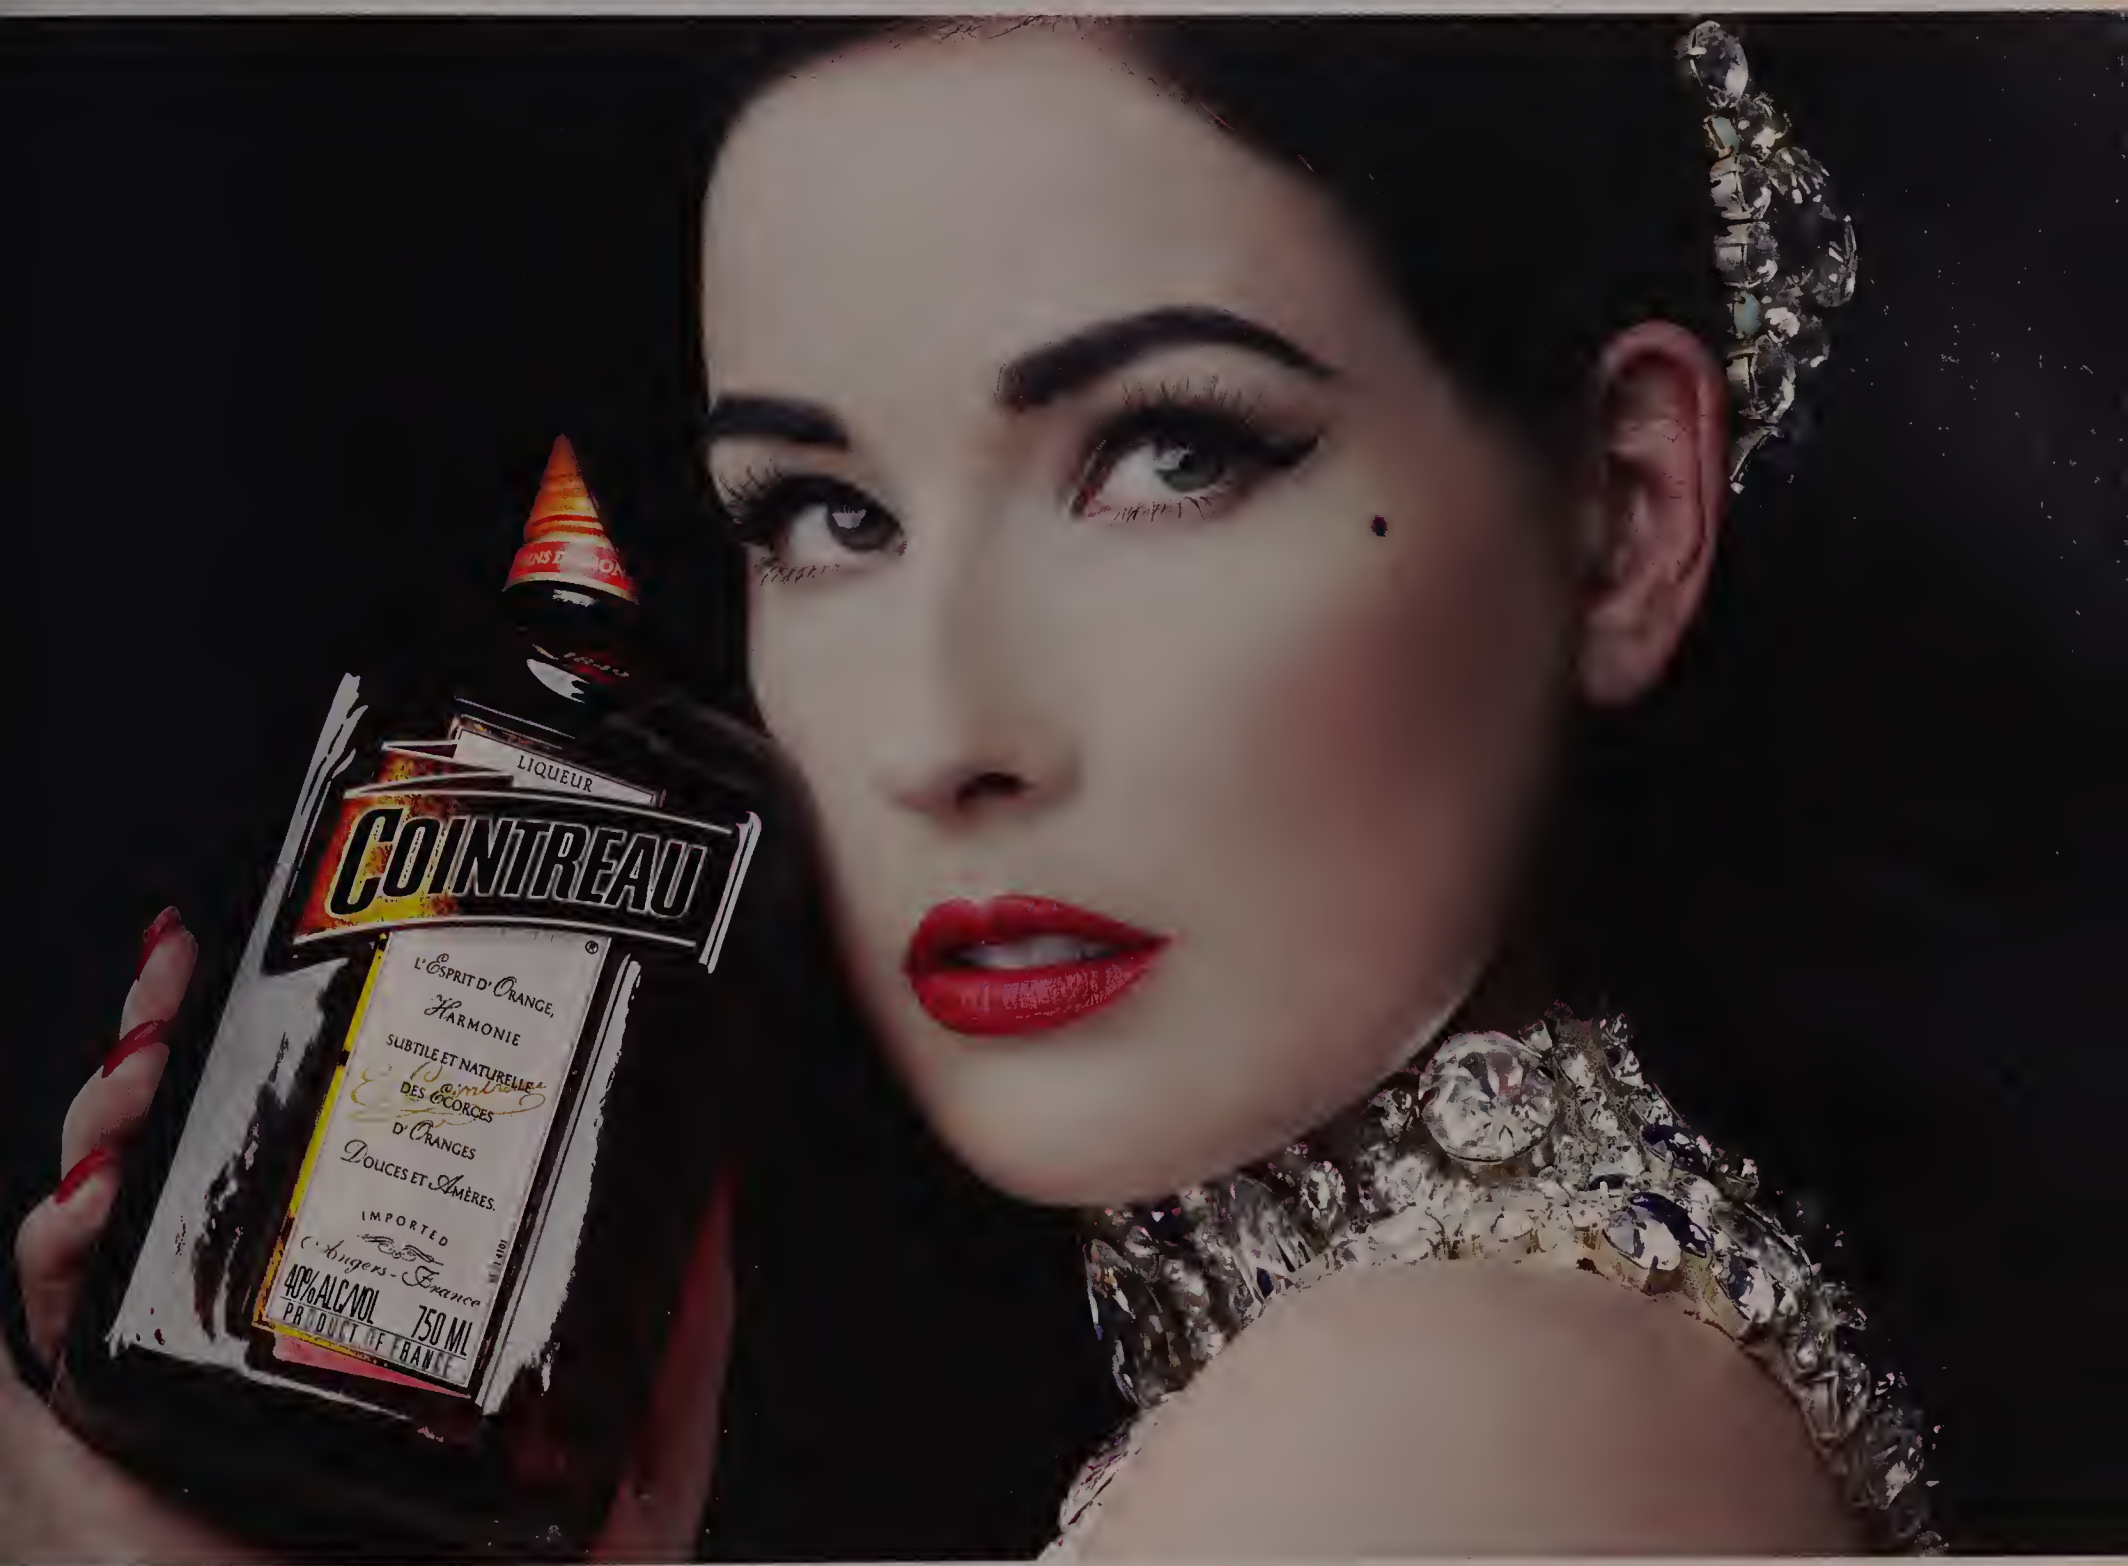
FIVE HORSES

A full stable of beers

LESS THAN A YEAR AGO, chef Aaron Parsons was making his own prosciutto at Cambridge's Bukowski Tavern. Now, as he prepares to open Five Horses Tavern in Somerville, he's putting the final touches on a vegetarian-friendly menu. There's even a vegan pizza, topped with chili-marinated heirloom tomatoes, shiso and whipped tofu.



Of course, there are plenty of choices for everyone, including four kinds of wings and a rotating list of more than three dozen beers. Owner/general manager Dylan Welsh pledges there'll never be anything more than $20 on the menu. Adding to the appeal: a copper-top bar for craft cocktails, a cozy new fireplace for fall and sidewalk seating for the rest of the summer.

JER-NE AT THE RITZ-CARLTON wasn't home to Boston's most memorable meal, but it's replacement sounds promising. The locally focused Artisan Bistro will open by the end of the month in a brighter setting redesigned with whitewashed floors, a communal table and an expanded bar. Chef Fabian Ludwig, whose background includes a stint at Gramercy Park Hotel in Manhattan, will serve up a menu of bistro dishes along with burgers and flatbreads. Worth checking out: the cheese plate with house-made pickled figs, quince and preserved walnuts, and the brunch-time Bloody Mary menu with fresh tomato juice.

FINALLY, THE RUMOR ABOUT the old Rocca space is true: The Aquitaine Group plans to unveil an Italian restaurant in the venue early next year. "February of 2012, if we're lucky," says partner Jeffrey Gates.

Song of Success

VOICE LESSONS

Nearly 11 million people tuned in to watch Javier Colón win the first season of NBC's The Voice. Before competing on the show, he lived in West Newton and Waltham. He returns to Boston on Sept. 17 to perform at Mix 104.1's free MixFest 2011 concert at the DCR Memorial Hatch Shell.

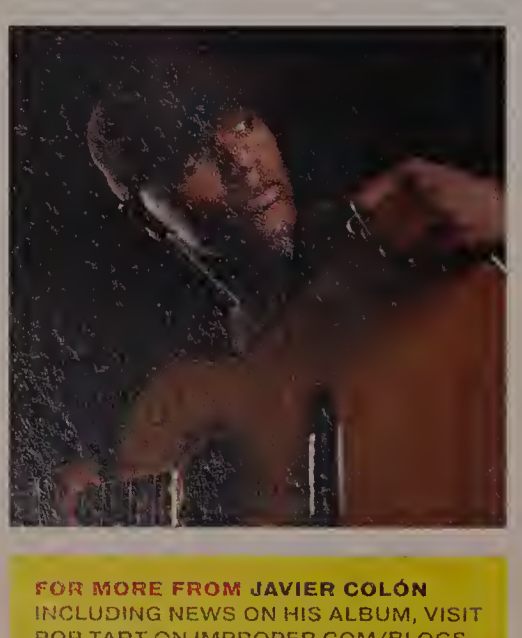
Are you surprised at how drastically your life has changed?

Honestly, I feel like I've taken over somebody else's life.

What's the most important lesson you learned from The Voice?

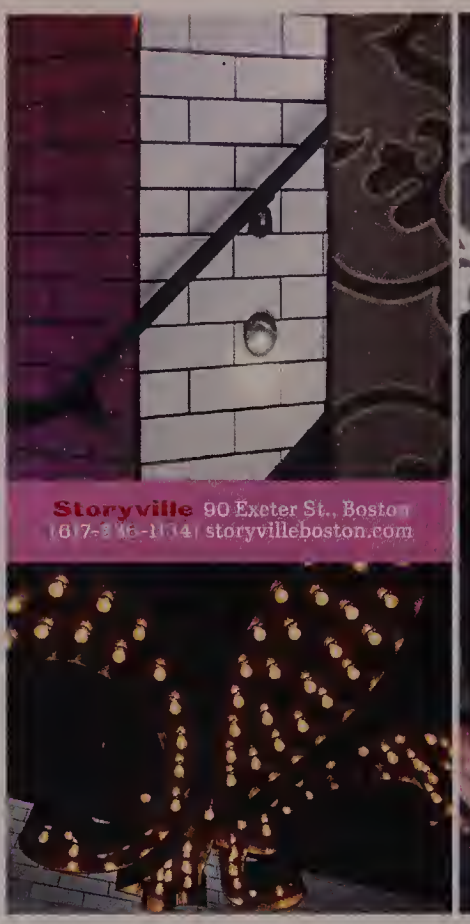
It was about handling pressure and being comfortable performing live in front of that many people. The only thing you can control on that show is the songs that you sing.

Who would you most want to collaborate with?



My idols are James Taylor and Stevie Wonder, so I guess that's an ultimate dream, and Beyoncé is one of the greatest performers of our time. I'd really love to collaborate with Natasha Bedingfield.

What made you want to audition for the show?



I was signed to Capitol Records for a while but had really just been releasing songs that I recorded at home on iTunes. Really, it was out of the necessity of needing to support my family but still do what I loved.

Any fun memories from performing in Boston?

I think the last concert I did before the tour was at Bill's Bar. There were probably more folks drunk than sober, but it was still great. I was in a band called EmcQ, and we used to play at all of the clubs, Paradise, Great Scott. KYLE WRIGHT

First Taste

TURNING A PAGE

When Brian Lesser shuttered Saint after nine pulsating years at the Copley Square Hotel, it was more because of boredom than business. "I want to be on the edge of the industry," he says. "It was time to refocus and give people something new." He's now launching Storyville, opening this month. "Maybe the name sounds a little gimmicky, but there's an incredible amount of history here," he continues. "Once you know the story, you understand and appreciate what we're doing."

STORYVILLE WAS A HAVEN FOR LEGENDS LIKE DUKE ELLINGTON.

Storyville pays homage to the famous jazz club launched in the same space by producer George Wein in 1950. That Storyville borrowed its name from the red light district in New Orleans and was a haven for legends like Duke Ellington, Dave Brubeck and Billie Holiday (who recorded an album at the venue).

Lesser's modern interpretation winks to that aesthetic with a fleur-de-lis motif, glossed black leather and shadowy corners appropriate for slipping out of any remaining Saint-hood. The space is divided into two separate entities: a crimson speakeasy-inspired bordello room, where chef Louis DiBiccari serves up twisted renditions of old-school favorites, and a larger main room, where partygoers will find a DJ and a more open floor plan. Beverage director William "English Bill" Codman, formerly of Woodward at Ames, has designed a menu for both sections, but will really flex his mixing muscles in the bordello with a focus on craft cocktails.

Musicians will tentatively play on Wednesday nights. "Who wouldn't want to perform at a club that has hosted so many iconic names?" asks Lesser. For now, the plan is to build an after-work clientele, with an aim to transition them to the clubbier side of Storyville as the night progresses.

But why bring Storyville back now? Lesser credits the changing attitude in Boston nightlife. "Here you either rely on the college market or you try to emulate New York," Lesser adds. "Why not do something that's uniquely Boston? We need this." KYLE WRIGHT

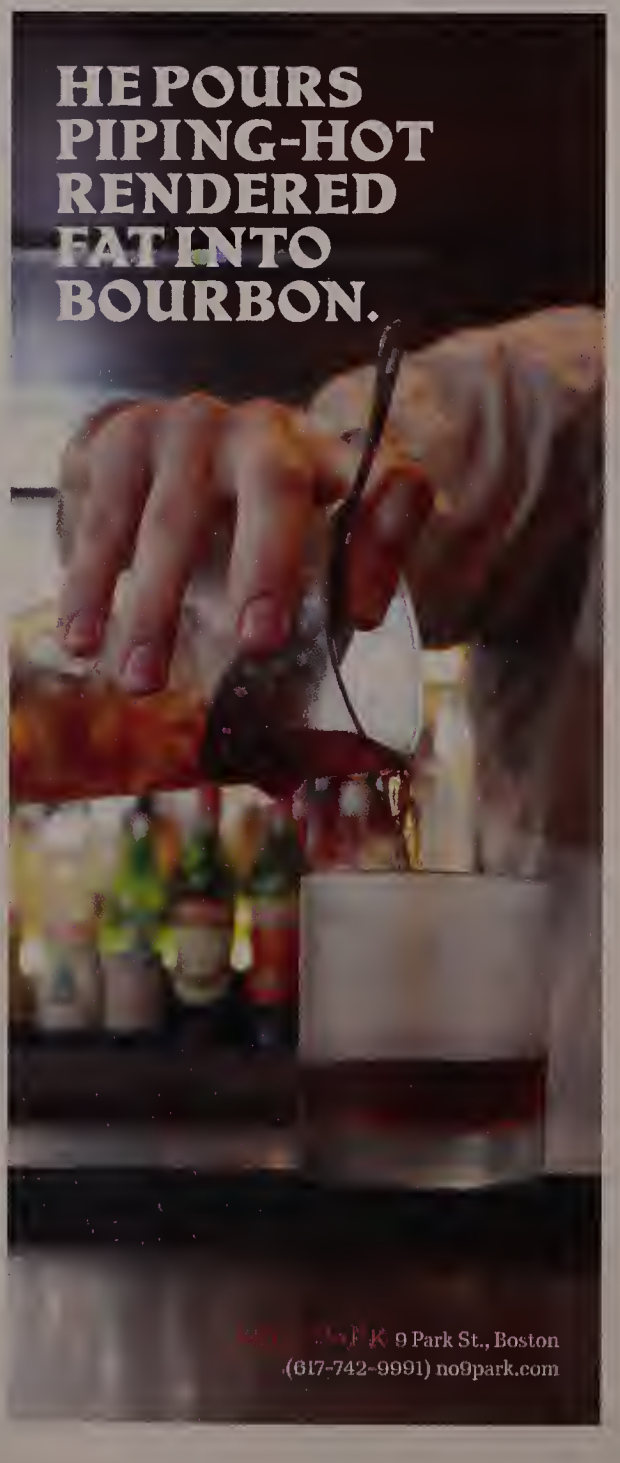
Sticky Situation

Given the opening buzz, it was expected that a honey boutique would be well stocked with the sweet stuff—like wine-y wildflower nectar from South Deerfield's Warm Colors Apiary and Brazilian killer-bee honey with a chocolaty finish. But Mary Canning's Follow the Honey is also a hive for finds like long-burning beeswax candles and handpicked, vintage housewares, including a winged antique mirror and a crackly, honey-dipped lace tablecloth. ELIZABETH BOMZE

Drink of the Moment

Quacker Barrel

A splash of fatty duck liver might compel timid imbibers to run foie, foie away. Not Ted Kilpatrick, bar manager at No. 9 Park. A sophisticated follow-up to his Old Foieshioned, LA VIE DU CANARD → ($14) is a carefully composed cocktail for gourmands.



To make his foie gras–spiked bourbon, Kilpatrick pours piping-hot rendered fat into bourbon for an eight-hour infusion. Next, the mixture is frozen to separate the oils and poured through a coffee strainer to remove excess grease.

But Kilpatrick cautions, it's not all about the duck. "The foie is just a component," he says. "Just like a dish, the flavors should be balanced." Inspired by a Barbara Lynch dish pairing foie gras with artichoke, he adds Cynar, a bitter distilled from the thorny vegetable. La Vie du Canard is balanced with a wheat-packed bourbon that fills the mouth with big flavors.

The foie's buttery notes emerge mid-palate. Aperitivo-about-town Cocchi Americano and an orange peel rub create a surprisingly crisp, astringent finish that leaves you ready for another sip. Together, the components make a convincing case for complexity over gimmickry.

Though it's rich and savory, the concoction's special ingredient is tough to pin down. The foie flavor is subtle and the drink never feels heavy, but a salty film coats the mouth with just a few sips.

"I get excited when customers order it," Kilpatrick says. "But I wish I could suggest they save it until after dinner." He finds that the robust bevvy pairs best with fruit- or chocolate-based desserts like Lynch's chocolate cream tart. Turns out, alcohol and livers are a good match after all. LINDSEY CANANT

Beauty

New Moon

Why stick with one shade, when a moon manicure can have you looking like a 1930s movie star? Start off with red and a neutral shade for a classic take, or modernize the look with tonal colors like lavender and deep purple. Donna Charloff, MiniLuxe's director of training and development, gives DIY tips:

››› Apply a clear base coat.

››› Add two coats of your desired moon shade over the entire nail and let dry completely. (This can take 30 minutes or longer, if you want to play it safe.)

››› Use clear binder reinforcers (yes, the kind you used in middle school) and position them to create your desired moon shape.

TALES OF LOSS

A novel of family and heartbreak

IN HER FOURTH NOVEL, Leah Hager Cohen shows her knack for unspooling characters, showing their consciousness from the inside. Their grief is experienced intimately, privately and often quite beautifully.

Married couple John and Ricky—he's in theater, she's in finance—have two children. She's pregnant with a third, but she hides the fact that the baby has a fatal chromosomal abnormality. Just briefly alive, the baby's death spurs rumbling among the other children. Daughter Biscuit secretly devises a mystical burial ritual for the ashes. Her lonely, bullied brother, Paul, retreats into writing graphic novels. As John learns of Ricky's secret and the unique betrayal it entails, his teenaged daughter, Jess, begot in his own teenaged years, comes to stay. And, yes, she's pregnant, ironically invoking the couple's recent loss.

The Grief of Others
By Leah Hager Cohen

Cohen lives in Belmont.

Paul is transfixed by this half-sister with a twinkle of romantic longing. Another tormented soul, Gordie, whose father has died, attaches his own loneliness to Jess.

Cohen twists and unties the knots of hurt and guilt that beset John and Ricky, creating subtle connections of suffering that make up the readable richness of this novel. ✖✖✖

FROM PAGE 272: "John and Ricky have the crackling charge of film stars. They speak in funny little half-sentences, call each other Baby and Sweet Pea and carry on their own secret dialogue of glance and touch, right in front of Jess and the kids. There is a palpable complexity, as though the air between them has been folded into many layers, within which lie all the artifacts of their history together. Jess tries to monitor her gaze so as not to look at them too long at any one time."

THE WHEEL DEAL

Giving Hubway a spin

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

OFTEN THE MOST STRESSFUL part of the workday is just getting to the office. The noise, the congestion, the sea of bitter faces. A friend's therapist recognized that her commute was compounding her anxiety. So she recommended my friend get off her bike and start squeezing onto the T.

For years, Boston was ranked as one of the worst cities in the world for biking. But in 2007, noted cycling enthusiast/mayor Thomas Menino launched an initiative to reverse this reputation. The biggest step has been the implementation of Hubway, a near six million-dollar bike-sharing program that debuted in July.

There are now 600 bicycles stationed at 61 kiosks, stretching from the North End to Allston. For prices ranging from $5 a day to $85 a year, the bikes provide an intriguing alternative to cabs and public transportation. (Key addendum: That price remains at its base as long as you return your bike every 30 minutes. An hour ride would cost a casual user an additional $6, and from there prices can escalate into the prohibitively expensive.)

On the surface, the program is fun, green and healthful, the commuting equivalent of forgoing a steak for a salad. In practice, the program can be disappointing, like forgoing a steak for a salad.

Boston is notoriously difficult to navigate by car (and, because it follows the same basic rules, by bicycle). My commute takes about 35 minutes if I walk, 25 if I take the T and 20 with Hubway. In my first rush-hour ride, I had more scares and broke more laws then I thought I could squeeze into a 15-minute window.

I went the wrong way down one-way streets. A valet almost clocked me with a car door. I rode on sidewalks and ran red lights—although I don't feel so bad about these last two. (Sidewalk riding is only illegal in "business districts," and the state has yet to define what that actually means for cyclists, while getting a head start at a red light is apparently the bicycle version of jaywalking.)

Part of my performance can be blamed on inexperience, and I've gotten better. What worries me is the riders I've seen who are much worse. Drunk kids biking the wrong way down Cambridge Street at night. A woman struggling to pedal ahead of a wailing ambulance. There'll be growing pains in a city adjusting to a new system. The problem is many of these riders aren't wearing helmets.

Hubway is already popular. Since July 28, there have been more than 42,000 rides. Cities of comparable size with their own bike-sharing programs, like Denver and Minneapolis, have taken months to reach that number. But according to city statistics, 28 percent of riders aren't wearing a helmet. That's about 12,000 helmetless Hubway trips in just over a month.

The good news: Hubway makes it comically easy to purchase a helmet. They have street teams and local stores selling them for $8. They'll even mail you one. Only someone who's already suffered brain trauma could avoid owning a helmet.

MassBike executive director David Watson recognizes the influx of new riders. The number of cyclists has quadrupled in the last three years, and according to Watson, "There's definitely a learning curve." MassBike has begun offering free one-hour classes to Hubway users, and Watson cites studies showing that getting more bikes out on the road actually makes cycling safer. Says Watson, "Everyone has to become aware, so it essentially forces the issue."

Many more bikes are coming. In the next few years, the city envisions adding more than 4,000 additional bikes and 200 kiosks, with Hubway's reach extending into Brookline, Cambridge and Somerville. Thankfully, the infrastructure is changing, too. Says urban planner and Boston "bike czar" Nicole Freedman, "Would I expect someone like my grandmother to be biking across the city now? No. But five years from now, will the infrastructure work for someone like my grandmother? Probably, yeah." Recently, more than 38 miles of bike lanes have been added, with lanes coming soon to the Greenway and Mass. Ave.

I've yet to find Hubway's place in my life. Walking's just as good for my health, and it saves me from biking's minor heart attacks. But I have a dear friend (who owns a much better TV than I do). Getting to his place for football games is a huge pain by any way other than taxi. This fall, cycling could merge cohesively and cost-effectively with my sloth, and that's when I'll know if we have a system that works. ✖✖✖

THE LONG AND SHORTS OF IT

How to experience all sides of Bermuda in a weekend.

TICKLED PINK You're just a quick flight away from all the colors of Bermuda.

EVER SINCE DARK AND Stormys got trendy, the relationship between Boston and Bermuda has blossomed into that of a highly functioning long-distance couple. Bermudians come here every few months to hit up the big department stores unknown to the island; we suck down their rum and dream of pink sands. If you've got a long weekend and the right itinerary, you can soak up all the pastel-printed island has to offer—whether you're aiming to take in culture or just a lot of mixed beverages.

Direct flights on JetBlue or Delta will get you to Bermuda in two hours. From there you can tour the entire island in an hour by taxi, but who wants to waste time in transit? Staying in the town of Hamilton optimizes your access. Once the hub of Bermuda's cruise industry, ocean liners would dock downtown, allowing tourists to barhop or stroll the shops (running the gamut from Louis Vuitton to ramshackle T-shirt traps). Nowadays, smaller cruise ships still drop anchor, but the town is largely just a vibrant main street with old-school storefronts and stiff drinks.

The mammoth Fairmont Hamilton Princess hotel has been a luxury landmark since the late 1800s, when it was a bubblegum-hued playground for royals and 19th-century celebs. It still keeps a traditional facade with afternoon tea service and oil paintings of the Queen, but the Friday happy hour draws a crowd of 1,500 very modern locals and mainlanders. When you've had your fill, head to the always-crowded Port O Call for fresh seafood and cocktails, like the Dark Night, a twist on the Goslings go-to enlivened by berries and blackberry brandy.

For sun and sand, a free ferry runs throughout the day from the hotel to its Southampton sister property, shuttling guests to postcard-perfect Horseshoe Bay or the Limited direct Sunday departures mean you'll need to focus your sightseeing on Friday and Saturday.

Despite creating the Rum Swizzle, today the Swizzle Inn is little more than a tourist trap. Skip the crowd (and save on cab fare) by grabbing one of the fruity sippers at any of the bars in downtown Hamilton.

Fairmont's less-crowded private beach. It's an impressive mix of climbable rocks, turquoise water and blush sands. Public ferries also run from Hamilton to other ports throughout the island, making for an easy commute to fresh sights and beaches.

For context, check out the National Museum of Bermuda, where the Commissioner's House provides a crash course on the island's history. It's adjacent to the Royal Naval Dockyard's touristy mashup, but it's worth braving the crowds of cruisers in shorts and fanny packs for a quick snack at the Bermuda Rum Cake Company (culinary history counts, too).

When the sun sets, dinner at the Waterlot Inn can't be missed. The 340-year old property overlooks Jew's Bay and serves up Bermudian fare like fish chowder (a cousin of the Manhattan variety) and outstanding steaks. Aim to be back in Hamilton before the evening slips by, as the warmer months bring public concerts and festivals to Barr's Bay Park and the port. It's a picturesque ride by taxi, with a pepper-scented breeze and twinkling lights from houses that look made from gingerbread. Besides, a skyline without a Citgo sign just feels like vacation. ✖✖✖

UNRISKY BUSINESS

Safe bets and solid fare define the menu at Remick's.

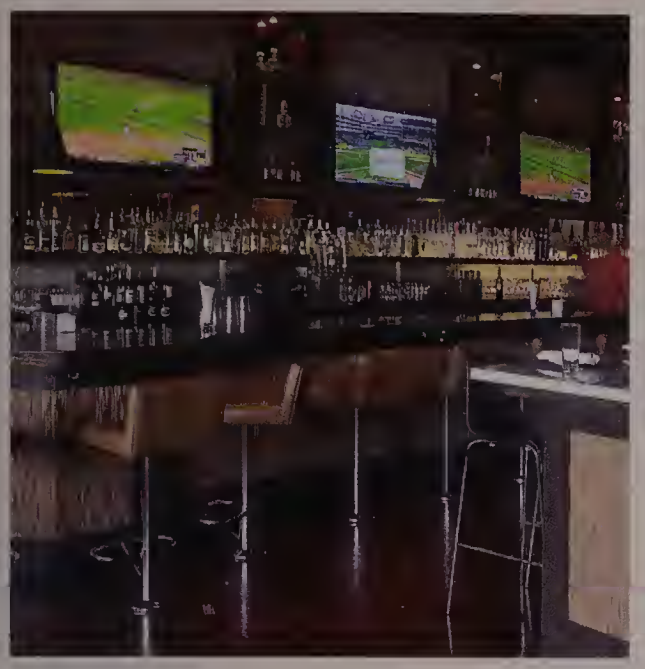
TASTING FLIGHT The crispy half duckling is poultry that pleases.



THERE ARE THREE KINDS of neighborhood restaurants. There's the kind serving cheap, tasty grub that's great when you're too tired to cook. You have the hidden gem you're thankful for when you have a special occasion and the cash to properly celebrate. And there's the eatery that's somewhere in between—a semi-fancy place with reasonable food where you can take your parents. Remick's in Quincy resides squarely in this category.

The latest from chef Marc Orfaly, who also owns Pigalle in the Theater District and Marco's in the North End, is located near Quincy Center, in the space formerly occupied by Finian's. Exposed brick, textured walls and long mirrors give the taupe-painted room an updated '60s feel, but the panel of flat-screens over the bar acts as the restaurant's distracting focal point. Another potential distraction is the air conditioning, as it's cranked high enough to influence your dinner order. (Bring on the hot plates.)

But much may be forgiven by welcoming touches, like the complimentary plate of airy focaccia, made-in house daily or the fried bacon at the bar. Bacon also elevated the shrimp and grits ($13), where it joined with a panko-fried egg to form the best comfort-food binder, fat. Beurre blanc aside, the crispy fried calamari ($12) could've been on the menu at any North End red-sauce joint. (It even came with the requisite marinara sauce.) Asian-style, char-grilled baby back ribs were also disappointing. The accompanying Vietnamese hot, sweet and sour sauce was a flavorless blend featuring nary a drop of fish sauce to mark it as Vietnamese. In general, I'd stay away from anything Asian-inspired, like the banana won tons ($5) or, as a dining companion described them, crab Rangoon's dessert cousin. Salad is a better choice, including one with sliced avocado and mango ($12), served with crumbled goat cheese, sliced radish and a grapefruit vinaigrette.

Mains were reasonably priced although under-seasoned on both of my visits. This wouldn't be a problem for a good cut of meat, like the whole-roasted rib eye for two ($20 per person), but curiously the dish was always sold out, even though we were dining early. A lack of flavor was especially pronounced with the steak tips ($15), which were ordered medium-rare but arrived still showing signs of life, which may be why they waged battle with my knife. As the tips are made from hanger steak, I recommend going to the source itself. The sliced hanger steak ($18) yielded juices that were all the accompaniment needed for a side of herbed French fries. Although elegantly plated, the roasted half Bell & Evans chicken ($15) was bland and dry, but the scallion potato cake and roasted-garlic gravy resuscitated the flat-liner. A better bird is the crispy half duckling ($18), which came both crackling and tender with a drizzling of sour citrus sauce. The best dish was the sole oreganata ($17), a baked fillet of sole served over potato Lyonnaise and topped with panko crumbs, fried capers and a butter sauce. Soft, creamy and harmonious, it was impossible to distinguish where the fish ended and the potato began. But fish fans should avoid the shrimp scampi, which consisted of five overcooked shrimp fringing a half-pound of linguine tasting like it was dressed with little else than olive oil.

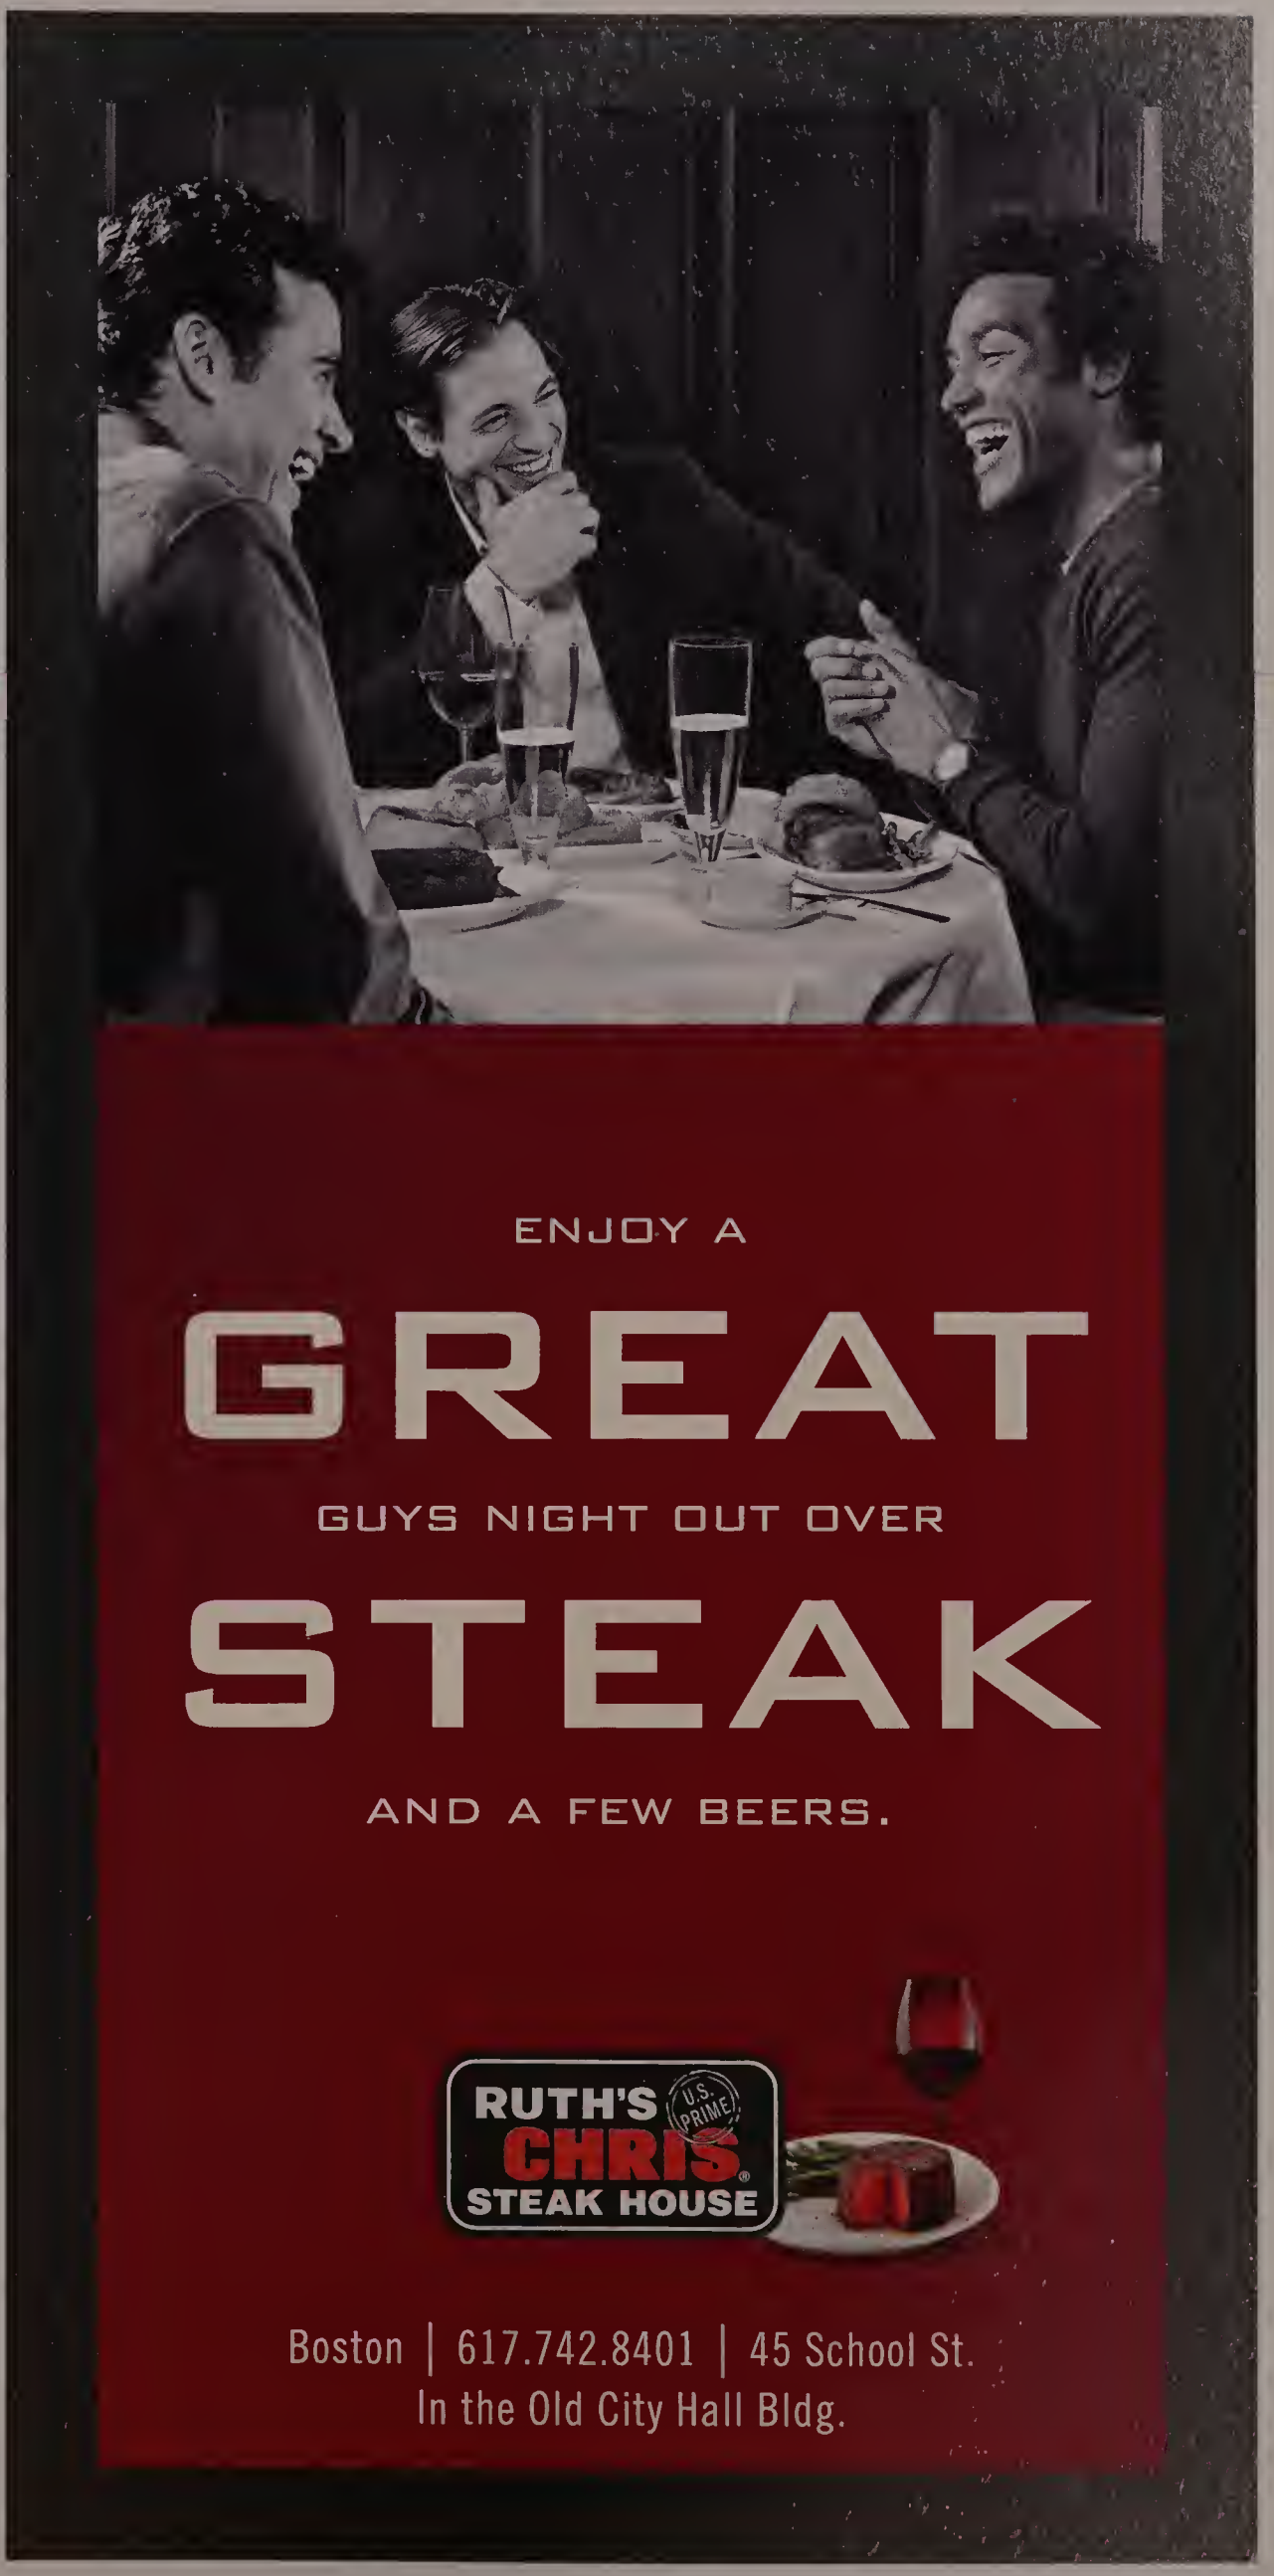
B.N.'s Picks

Shrimp and grits



Avocado and mango salad

Sole oreganata

Remick's has an extensive bar but an indistinct cocktail program. In contrast, there's an extensive wine selection. With the exception of the 2009 Pine Ridge cabernet sauvignon ($66), all the bottles are offered by the glass and are informatively described with respect to menu pairings. The 2008 Hayman & Hill pinot noir ($36, bottle; $12, glass) played well with both the seafood and meat dishes.

Named after the late-actress Lee Remick, who was born in Quincy, the restaurant aspires to be a celebrated local. But the menu avoids taking chances. Embracing the familiar can work beautifully, but shaking things up keeps diners engaged. So while the dishes may offer star billing to panko crumbs, wasabi oil and Vietnamese sauces, in terms of flavor they only make a cameo appearance. ✖✖✖

PRIVATE EVENT

In my world, the term "Private Event" is used quite often. Many establishments offer it as a service, but few of them truly understand what it takes to create a meaningful social experience. At Strega Waterfront, it's at the core of who we are.

What makes a private event memorable? The idea is simple: Let the conversation, laughter and inspiring moments between guests become the real focus of the assembly.

The rest is our job. The artistry and thoughtful presentation of the food and wine. The careful craftsmanship of every drink. The subtle adjustments to the climate, lighting and mood. The masterful planning and close collaboration with the host.

The details. The details. The details. This is what we do.

SNAP OUT OF IT

Confronting a case of photo overload

Read more at improper.com/blogs

AS THE IMPROPER'S 20TH anniversary drew near, I reminisced about my first months on the job. I started here in 1999, so the evidence of my early employment is in the form of actual print photos, the kind you developed from real film. As I pawed through Rite Aid envelopes full of prints from the early 2000s, a remarkable theme emerged: Most of these photos were actually good. When the price of each print came to about a dollar, including the costs for film and developing, you tended to self-edit, distilling your life down to the high points. In the film era, you didn't say, "Hey, the sky looks crazy!" and casually fire off 10 exposures without thinking about it.

Today, I have enough crazy sky images in my iPhoto library to publish a coffee-table book called Whoa, It's Sunny but Look at that Storm Coming. That's if any of the photos were worthy of printing, which they're not.

Pre-digital camera, the story of my life is chronicled by just a few hundred photos. And that's enough. I was a kid. I played sports. Later I went to some parties. You get the idea. Then in 2004, I got a digital camera. My computer now contains 11,140 images, most of which are terrible.

My early digital photos aren't bad. They tend to capture important moments. But in 2004, a camera was still something you had to carry with you, so you only had one if you knew you'd be around some photo-worthy scenes. Now everyone has a camera at all times, digital storage is essentially limitless, and I have 2,000 photos of my dog.

That's just an estimate. I counted 219 photos of my dog before I got bored, and that only covered the first year we had him. When you're sorting 11,000 photos, boredom sets in quick. Every photo from either a wedding or Christmas is interchangeable with any other photo from a wedding or Christmas (hey, people dancing or opening gifts!). And some of my photos are just embarrassing. Did I actually drive to Vermont to look at foliage? That doesn't fit with my dangerous-sexy gangsta persona, but there's an iPhoto album filled with trees, proving I really did go leaf peeping. I probably also bought maple syrup, but hopefully I ate the evidence.

My computer now contains 11,140 images, most of which are terrible.

Don't get me wrong, there are some powerful photos in the collection, too. Like the shot of the fake mustache that I found discarded on the sidewalk in New York City. (It had a certain lonely gravitas.) And the pictures from my own wedding are pretty good. Not random-mustache-on-the-sidewalk good, but better than the ones of other people's weddings. Bold assertion: If photos were to cost a dollar, nobody would take photos of other people's nuptials.

The object of photos, ultimately, is to jog your memory and help you relive a particular experience. But they often send me off on tangents completely unrelated to the moment chronicled by the camera. For instance, on our honeymoon, Heather and I stayed at a hotel where they made little animals out of the towels. There's a shot of a towel-swan or some such thing on our bed. Now, looking at that image should prompt me to think about our trip and how great it was, but instead I start brooding on how hotels are getting out of hand with the whole personal-touch obsession. I'm especially concerned about the craze of folding the first sheet of the toilet paper into a little triangle. I don't have many rules for toilet paper, but one of them is: Don't use toilet paper that a stranger has fondled. When I see that folded piece of paper, I skip ahead one full rotation to get to the untouched territory. Between that, the towel swans and the facial tissue folded to resemble a Japanese fan, where does it stop, hotel management people? When you're in a hotel room, you want to think that you're the first person who's ever been in there. You don't want to imagine someone creeping in to make origami out of your underwear.

Maybe in a couple of months I'll take another stab at enjoying my honeymoon pictures. In the meantime, my photo avalanche deepens. I got a new cell phone two months ago, and it already holds 404 images, which means that I'm averaging more than six a day. That sounds frivolous, but how else would I document the fact that I received a piece of mail addressed to "Zra Dyger"? I mean, that's crazy. But not as crazy as the sky the other night. ✖✖✖

REVERSAL OF FORTUNES

This season, it's the D that could lead the Pats to the title.

LET ME BE THE FIRST knucklehead to say it (well, maybe not the first), but your New England Patriots have another shot at perfection.

Yes, I'm blinded by faith. The preseason is barely over, and I'm already trying to shut up Mercury Morris and the rest of the blowhards from the 1972 Miami Dolphins.

As for the 2007 Patriots, their "18-1" season is a memory that still haunts us. Like many New Englanders, I can be in the middle of a great day—out on the course or on the beach—and suddenly the recollection hits me like a blindside tackle. "Damn, I can't believe the Pats lost to the Giants."

Like any sports fan, I've got my baggage.

But I love this Patriots team, and I'm beginning to see some symmetry between this version and the team that kick-started the franchise's success. Entering his 11th year in the league, Tom Brady is now in his prime, and his mid-30s. Preparing for the future, the team has two young quarterbacks, Brian Hoyer and Ryan Mallett, who are headed in the right direction.

Brady is a surefire hall of famer, and in any discussion about the greatest quarterbacks of all time, his name comes up early and often. But if this team could summit that imposing mountain of perfection and actually plant their red, white and blue Patriots flag on top, the perception changes. Brady, and Bill Belichick, already recognized as one of history's best coaches, would move from all-pros to icons.

As the stench of the lockout finally fades and we move into the regular season, I'm now realizing that the work stoppage actually gave the Patriots an advantage. Experience and intelligence are two of the team's greatest strengths. Sure, they have their meatheads, but the Pats boast a lot of students of the game. My guess is that there were a lot of arrangements made in advance of the lockout, and a plan to efficiently implement new schemes after it.

The Patriots changed their defensive formation from a three-man line to a four-man line, and you have to wonder how much the team was able to prepare, as the rules of the lockout kept players barred from Gillette Stadium.

There aren't many teams that would dare try such changes during an offseason free of Organized Team Activities.

Sure, Belichick & Co. scoured the NFL for guys who were comfortable in the formation, but that was the easy job. The most important task was getting the players currently on the roster up to speed, so the defense's new look could be executed almost instantly.

One of my biggest bones of contention with Belichick's defenses the last half-dozen years has been their inability to bother the other team's quarterback. Notice I didn't say sack. Sacks win you glory, but just getting in an opposing quarterback's face can win you ballgames.

After Mike Vrabel went to Kansas City after the 2008 season, I can't remember an even semi-dominant outside pass rusher. Free agent Adalius Thomas was a flop. Tully Banta-Cain had his moments, but not enough to save him from being cut during this summer's training camp.

It appears there isn't another Vrabel on this team. (Recent pickup Andre Carter has looked impressive, but I'll reserve judgment on the 32-year-old.) Yet there might be enough "girth guys" on the defensive line—including small planets Albert Haynesworth and Shaun Ellis—to create some serious pressure up the middle.

For the first time since Ty Law was a Patriot, it appears the team has defensive backs who can cover man-to-man, particularly shutdown corner Devin McCourty. However, problems may arise on the other side of the field. Leigh Bodden sometimes looks like a potential star. But at 29, it's unclear if he'll ever fully actualize that potential.

As for the offense, incredibly it might be even more complete top-to-bottom: from receivers, to running backs, to linemen, to, well, Brady. The 2007 offense was predicated on scoring. The 2011 offense will be predicated on holding the football for a long, long time.

I'm intrigued by rookie running back Stevan Ridley and veteran Chad Ochocinco at wide receiver. But to be honest, neither is going to alter my hard-set view, no matter how good they prove to be. This will be the season of the Pats defense.

For years, they've been the afterthought. Their job description was simply to watch the offense take the lead and try not to give it back. But this time it's the defense that'll take the reins. It's the defense that'll intimidate, and it's the defense that'll make the difference between another disappointing ending and the ultimate success. ✖✖✖

ON YOUKILIS, CARTER AND BELICHIK'S DOCUMENTARY

TOSS-UP Beckett is half of a strong playoff combo.

5 REMAINING SOX STORIES

Is He OK? It's been a tough season for Kevin Youkilis, no doubt a result of the back injury that put him on the DL. Can the Sox survive if he's not 100 percent? I think so, but I'd rather not find out. Youk's seen better days, but his bat can still do serious damage, his glove's still one of the best, and his beard's still the only thing that makes sense in this crazy world.

Carl Is Crazy I'll hand it to Carl Crawford. For all his struggles, the guy's still trying to make the best of a miserable situation. But unlike earlier in the season, the effort's finally starting to pay off, just like I said it would. (Except I said the exact opposite, for months.)

He's Baaack(?) Clay Buchholz has resumed throwing and hopes to contribute down the stretch—but I don't see it happening. Would Theo really rush Buchholz into the bullpen and risk screwing up his arm (in addition to his back)? Not even the Sox doctors are nutty enough to advise something like that.

On the 1s and 2s John Lackey and Erik Bedard continue to fight for Buchholz's spot in the rotation, but at this point who cares? Neither one deserves the job. I'm more interested in Josh Beckett and Jon Lester. If those two are locked in, the Sox could win a title with Johnny Pesky in the third slot. (It's not like he's that much older than Wakefield.)

Who's Next? If they make the playoffs, the Sox will most likely play the Tigers or the Rangers. So I ask: Who'd you rather? On one hand, the Rangers have that scary lineup (and CJ Wilson). But on the other, do you really want to face Justin Verlander twice in a five-game series? I'll take my chances with Texas.

1 ONE SAD STORY

The news that Marc Savard will miss another season doesn't come as a complete shock, but it adds a heap of salt to an already painful wound. At this point, hockey's a wild afterthought. Let's just hope he can live a normal life. And that Matt Cooke burns in hell.

4 DATES TO WATCH

9/12: I don't often make guarantees, but I guarantee you don't do shit at work today. Pats at Dolphins on Monday Night Football.

9/16: It's the start of the most-anticipated Bruins training camp in 40 years (followed by the most invisible Celtics training camp in 13).

9/17: Ohio State visits the University of Miami for a game that will not exist.

9/18: The Chargers are in town for the home opener in Foxborough. Works out well since San Diego doesn't start trying until November.

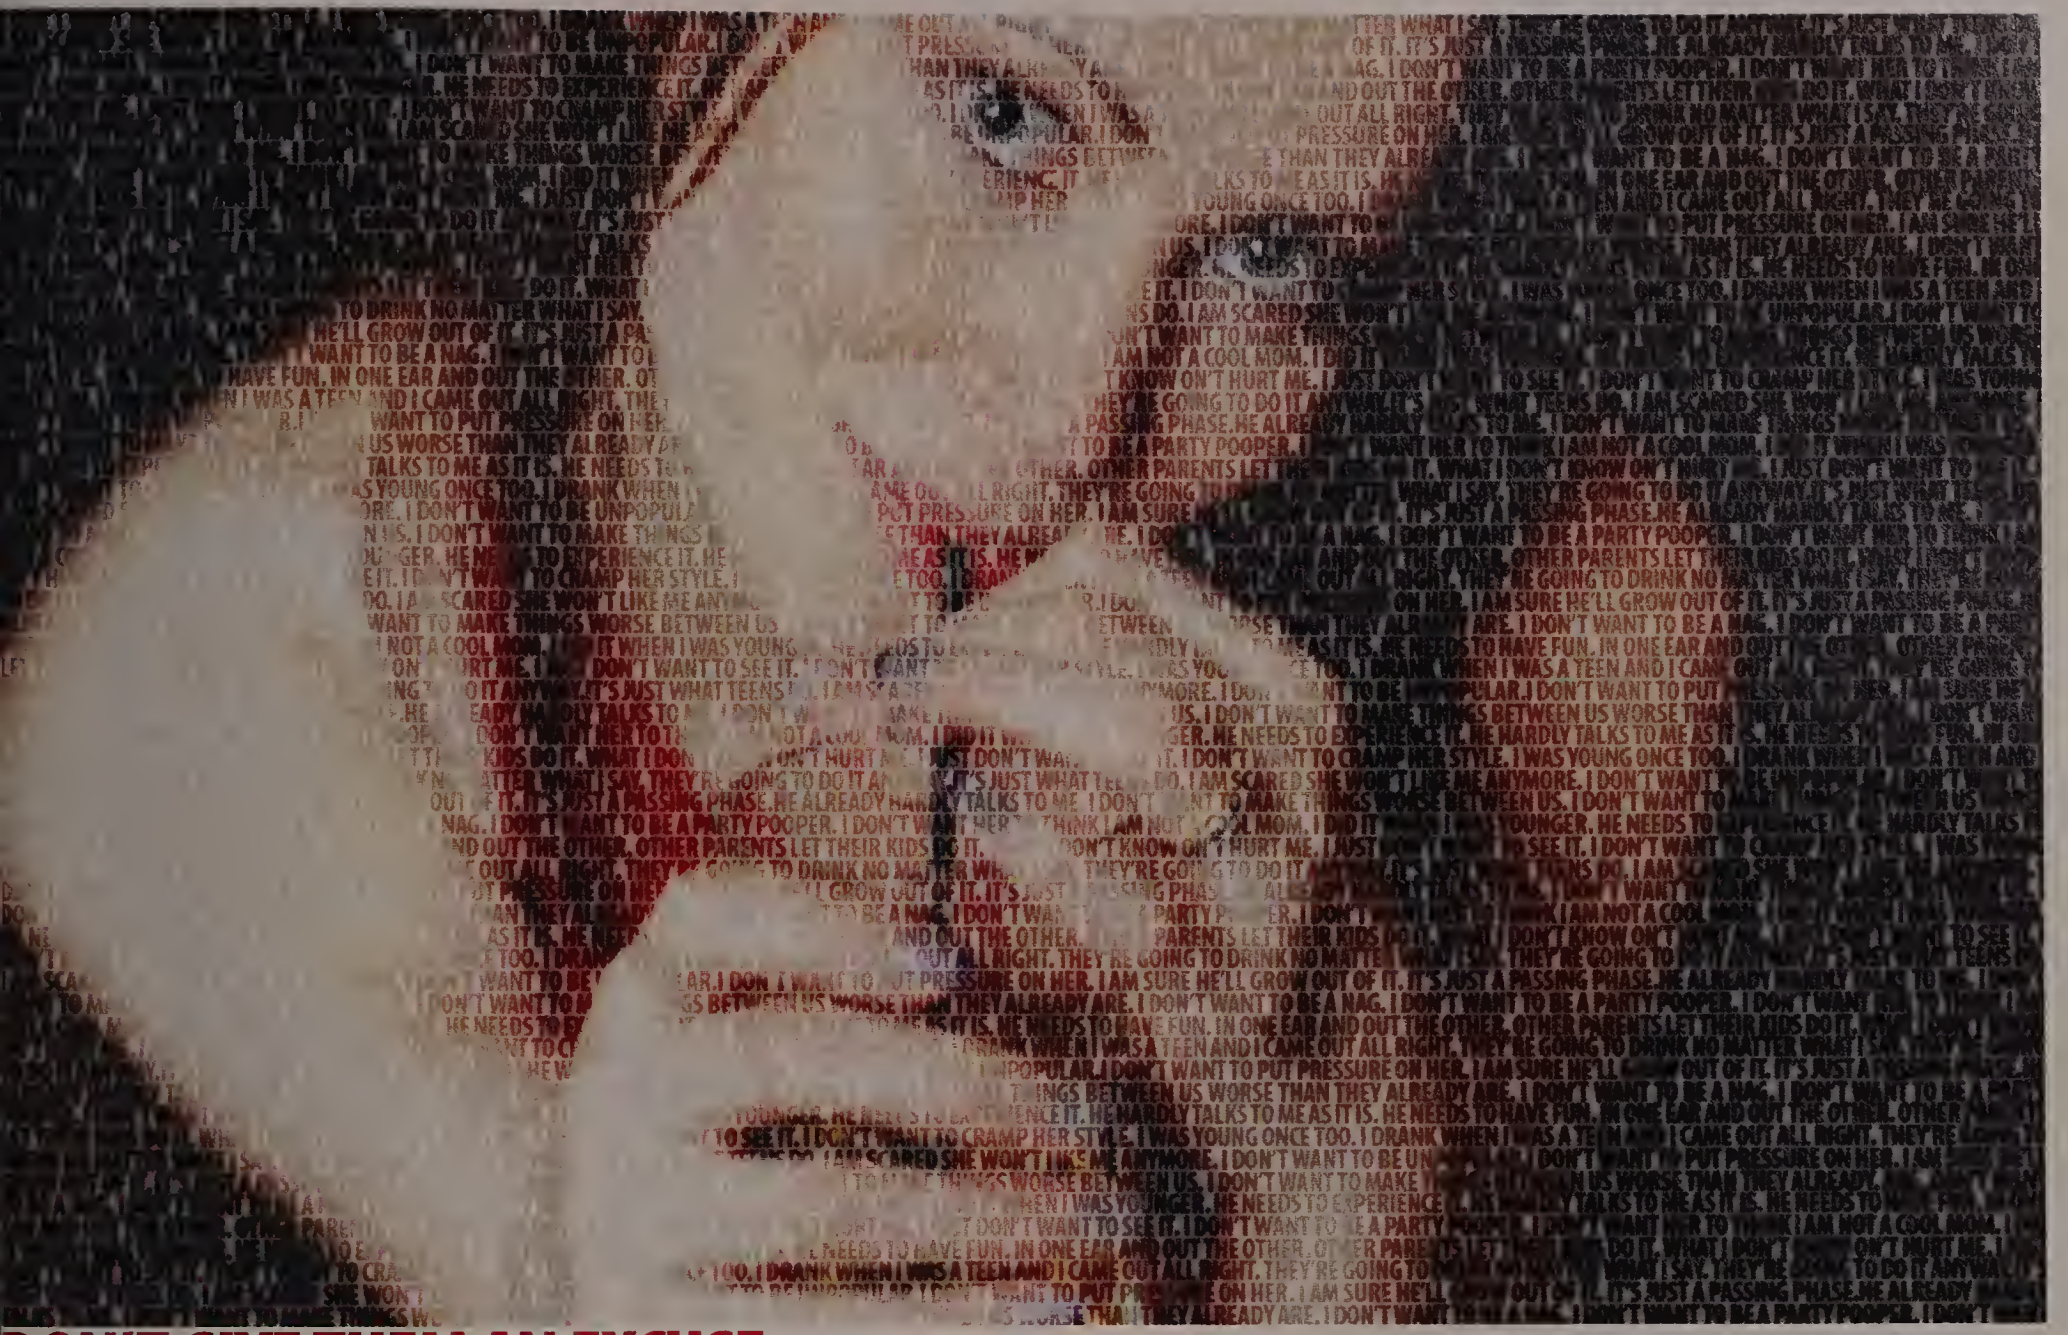
2 PATS EXTRAS

He Is Legend I'm guessing we've seen the last of Kevin Faulk in a Patriots uniform, but there's no way this will mark the end of his contributions. Even if he just hangs around on the P.U.P. list, there's no doubt Faulk will find a way to make an impact.

So Is This Guy If you don't have the NFL Network yet, you have until Sept. 15 to make it happen. That's when the two-part documentary on the life of Bill Belichick makes its glorious debut. (I haven't been this excited about anything since the fourth quarter of Super Bowl XLII.)

3 PATS PREDICTIONS



In the 50s Since Tom Brady took over in 2001, there's only been one time the Pats had three receivers finish a season with 50-plus catches. And that was in 2008—the year Brady was injured. But it'll happen this season. First of all, Welker's automatic. Then you've got Branch and Ochocinco, Gronkowski and Hernandez—maybe even Woodhead? There'll be at least three people with 50+. (But hopefully the Pats will make the playoffs this time.)

Lucky 13 Of course they'll make the playoffs. In fact, I've got the Pats finishing this season at 13-3, with losses coming on the road against the Jets, Steelers and Eagles. Speaking of which, did you know this will be Michael Vick's first career start against the Pats? (Assuming he's still standing on Nov. 27.)

Mr. Carter Of the 17,000 defensive linemen the Pats brought in this season, Andre Carter will have the greatest impact, at least by the numbers. I'll go as far as to say that Carter reaches double-digit sacks, becoming only the third Patriot to do so in 20 years.

“I hope someday to be the Marlon Brando of Martha’s Vineyard.”

Soroff On LENNY CLARKE

The veteran performer talks about showbiz, partying and Chelsea Handler.

COMEDIAN, ACTOR AND NATIVE CANTABRIGIAN LENNY CLARKE, 58, is about to launch his new series, Are You There, Vodka? It's Me, Chelsea, based on Chelsea Handler's best seller. After getting his start on the local stand-up scene, Clarke landed his first TV gig, the eponymous Lenny, which was followed by The John Larroquette Show and numerous others, the most recent being Denis Leary's firefighter drama Rescue Me. On the big screen, Clarke has appeared in many films, including most of the Farrelly brothers' comedies. He lives on Martha's Vineyard with his wife, Jennifer, a charter boat captain and musician.

Jonathan Soroff: What's a nice Irish Catholic boy like you doing playing a Jewish dad?
Lenny Clarke: It's the role of a lifetime. It's so funny. Nobody knows what I am. The other night I told Larry David I was Jewish, and he believed me. But my first wife was Jewish. I thought it would help me in the business.

Are you trying to avoid the Jerry Stiller school of loud, overbearing Jewish father?
I am. I'm bringing a whole new dimension to it.

You've lost like 400 pounds…
[Laughs.] I've lost over a thousand pounds if you count all the ups and downs. But in the past five years, I've lost 192 pounds, and I've managed to keep it off.

What's your secret?
Weight Watchers.

So why aren't you a spokesperson for them?
Wait 'til January. You should see something by then. I'd tried other things. Denis Leary wanted to send me to a fat farm. I thought it was 'cause he loved me and cared about me. He said, "No, I just don't want to lose the fat guy on Rescue Me. If I have to get another fat guy, it'll be like changing Darrins on Bewitched."

Best part of being skinny?
I can see my dick again!

Did you have to get any plastic surgery?
Yeah. Abdominoplasty, or a tummy tuck. I had all this excess skin.

Why is Chelsea Handler obsessed with midgets?
I don't know, but I have the same affection for them. I love midgets. I know you're supposed to call them little people, but f it. Midget's in the dictionary, and until they take it out, I'm not stopping.

Do you still do stand-up?
Not really. I'm terrified I'll say the wrong thing and get crucified for it. The politically correct people have taken over. They've won. Stand-up is no fun anymore.

Do you miss working with Denis?
I love Denis. We're like an old married couple. It's ridiculous. We squabble over the stupidest things. He's kept me working. I remember when he called me to do the Sandra Bullock movie. I was sleeping on the couch in Kenny Rogerson's house. I'd just got divorced. I'd lost everything, totally broke. He's pulled me back from the brink a few times.

Favorite comedian of all time?
Probably the guys who've passed away recently: Rodney Dangerfield, George Carlin and Richard Pryor. But my all-time favorite would have to be Jackie Gleason. He's the reason I do this.

Biggest star you have in your phone?
Probably Denis. He's huge. And I don't have Chelsea's cell-phone number. Yet.

So how do you describe yourself?
Freak of luck. I'm just so grateful and thankful to have the career I have. It all started as a joke. I never knew I'd be making movies and doing television. I'm a poor kid from Cambridge.

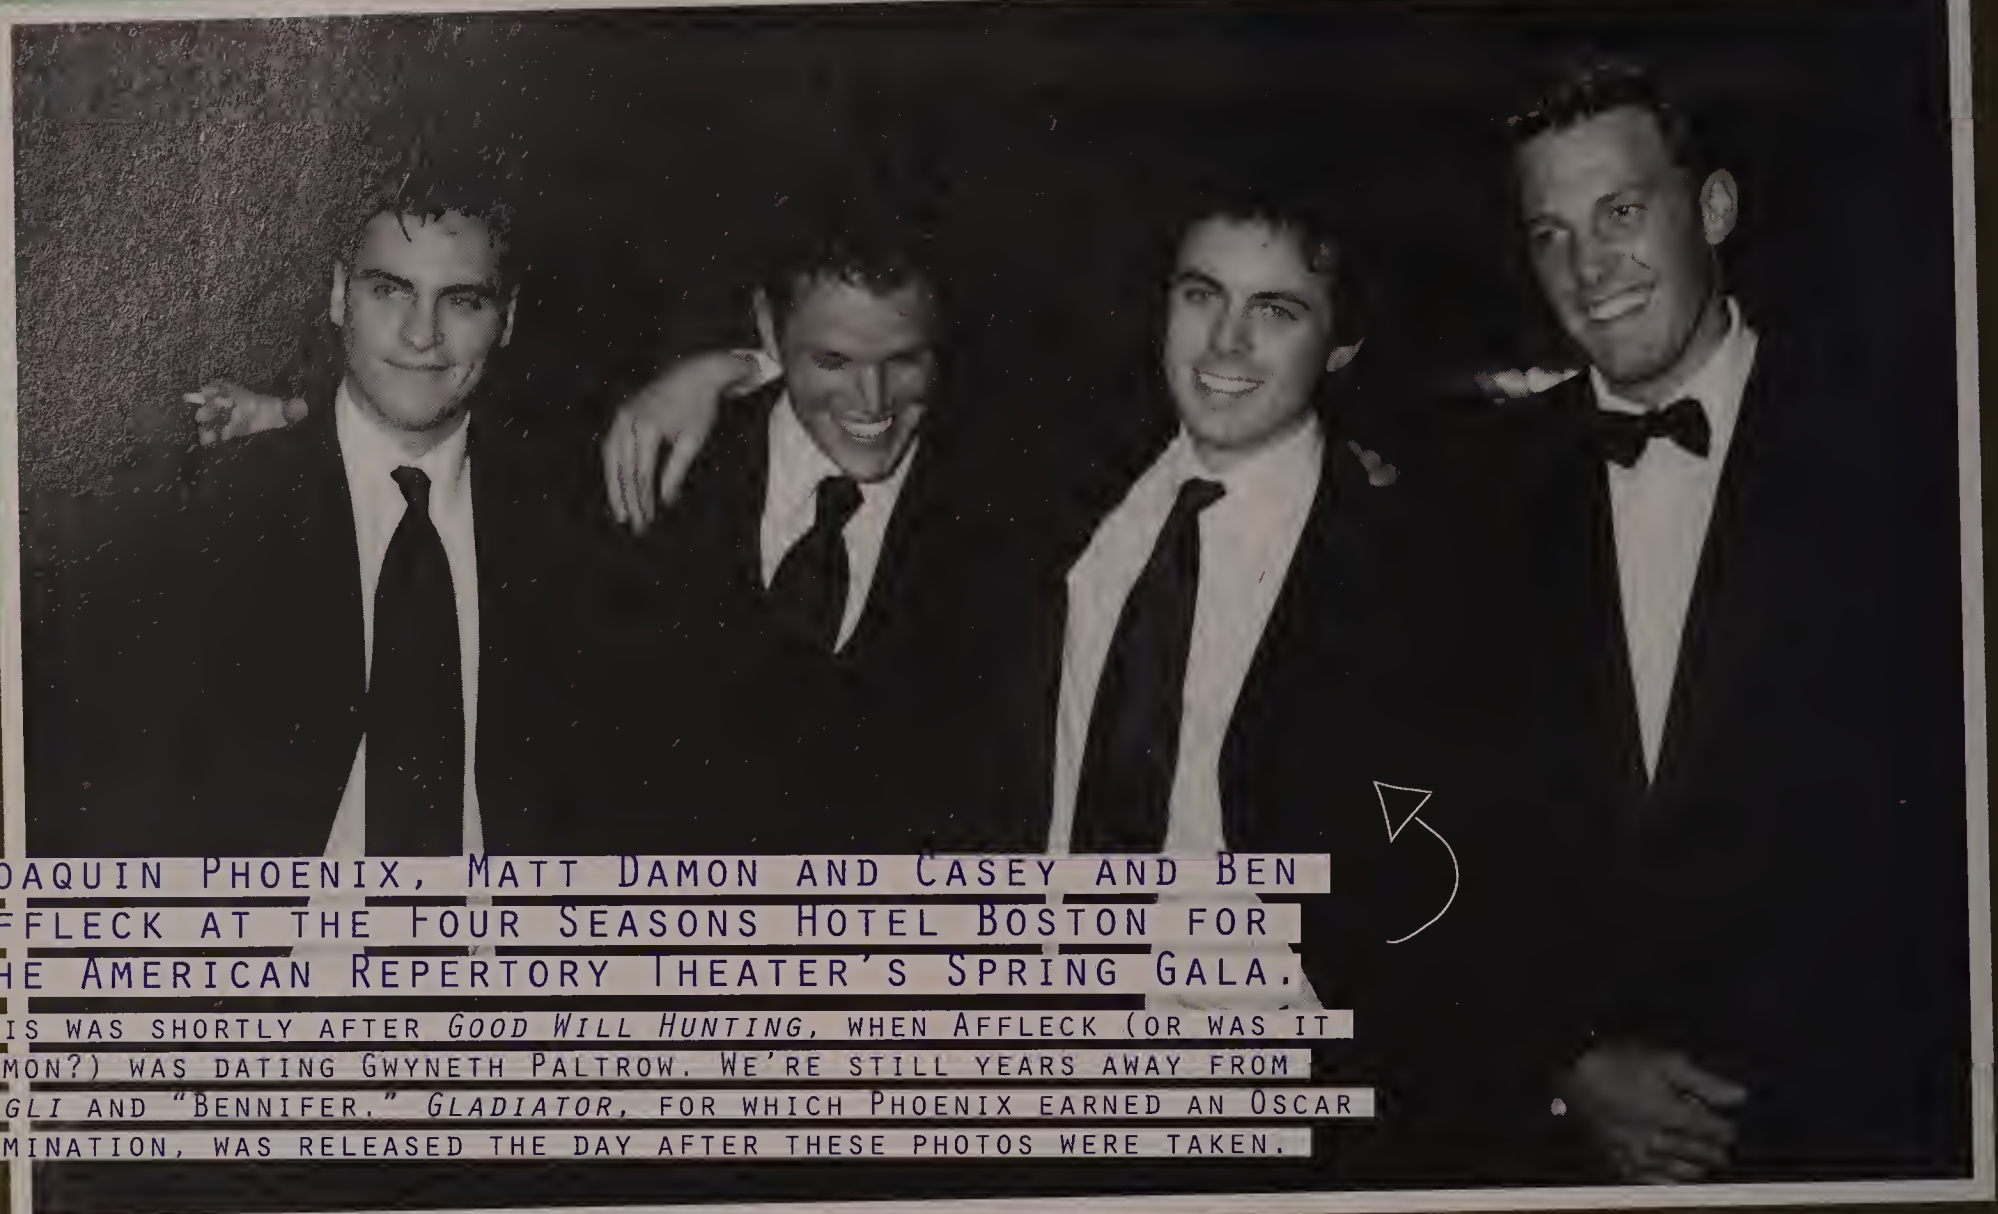
What's up with Charlie Sheen?
It's just such a sad statement about our society that people were paying to watch him fall apart. I think we're just moments away from broadcasting public executions.

Will Ashton Kutcher fly on Two and a Half Men*?*
Who's got more followers on Twitter? What has he got to lose? Demi's gonna leave him for a younger guy? I think people will tune in for the curiosity factor, and the writing is strong enough on that show, I think they'll get a few more years out of it.

Finish this joke: Two blind nuns walk into a fish market…
And one of them says, "Is that you, Mother Superior?"

Do you miss partying?
I don't miss waking up in the morning and not knowing where I am. It's a deal I worked out with the government. I don't drink, and they don't put me in jail. So far, so good.

Thing you miss most about Boston when you're away?
I'm supposed to say my family and friends, but it's clams at Kelly's.



Do you consider yourself a Vineyarder?
No, I'll never really be a Vineyarder. And you know what? When I'm walking around my six-acre spread and thinking, "That's a nice view of the water," I really don't give a shit. I hope someday to be the Marlon Brando of Martha's Vineyard, wandering around in a muumuu on Lucy Vincent Beach, shooing Alan Dershowitz away.

What do you consider your big break?
My first show, Lenny. I went from being a barroom stand-up to feeling like a superstar. I felt like Elvis. But the show was in the top 20 when the first Iraq war broke out, and it was "Lenny will not be seen tonight so we can bring you the war in Iraq." When they finally killed Saddam Hussein, I thought, "Payback's a bitch!"

Funniest thing you ever said onstage?
I was once getting heckled by this woman, and she just wouldn't let up, so finally I said, "You know what? I wouldn't f you for practice." She threw a bottle at me, and I was like, "I have a one bottle per night limit. G'night!"

Will your show be the biggest thing on TV?
Chelsea Handler is the hottest thing in the country, selling out stadiums, with four books on the best-seller list. It's Warner Bros. NBC has nowhere to go but up. So, yeah. ×××

AN EXAMINED LIFE

THE STORIES BETWEEN THE COLUMNS

BY EZRA DYER

WORKING STIFF
AS SHOWN IN THIS CANDID SNAPSHOT, THE IMPROPER OFFICES USED TO BE A LOT LESS BUTTONED-UP.

SOMETIME IN THE SUMMER OF 1999, I SPIED A HELP-WANTED LISTING IN THE BOSTON GLOBE. A MAGAZINE CALLED THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN WAS LOOKING FOR A SENIOR EDITOR, AND I FIGURED I'D BE JUST THE GUY FOR THE JOB. WITH THE NAÏVE (NAY, DELUSIONAL) CONFIDENCE OF A RECENT GRADUATE, I SENT IN MY THIN RÉSUMÉ AND SOME CLIPS OF MY COLLEGE NEWSPAPER COLUMN. SHORTLY THEREAFTER, I WAS CALLED FOR AN INTERVIEW.

I SPOKE WITH A FELLOW NAMED MARK, WHO TOLD ME, "YOU'RE NOT GOING TO BE THE SENIOR EDITOR, BUT I'LL GIVE YOU A COLUMN." THAT STATEMENT PERPLEXED ME, BECAUSE UP UNTIL THIS POINT I'D ASSUMED THAT "MARK" WAS AN HR PERSON OF SOME SORT. HOW COULD HE GIVE ME A COLUMN? SO I SAID, "THANKS! AND WHAT DO YOU DO AROUND HERE?" HE REPLIED THAT HE WAS MARK SEMONIAN, THE PUBLISHER AND EDITOR-IN-CHIEF. THEN, SURELY WONDERING WHAT KIND OF IDIOT HE'D INVITED ON BOARD, HE SENT ME ON MY WAY WITH AN ASSIGNMENT TO WRITE THREE SAMPLE COLUMNS. RECENT GRADS, HERE'S A TIP FROM ME TO YOU: IF YOU GET A JOB INTERVIEW AT A MAGAZINE, TAKE A LOOK AT THE MASTHEAD FIRST.

My column debuted on Oct. 6, 1999, and I haven't missed an issue since. According to my calculations, that means that this issue contains my 297th column. At 800 words per issue, that's 237,600 words. (Fun fact: I don't know how to type!) For comparison, that total is longer than Charles Dickens' A Tale of Two Cities (135,420) and Ernest Hemingway's The Sun Also Rises (67,707) combined. And Hemingway never put on a Boston Bean costume, went to his wife's workplace and started anonymously groping her, as I did in the name of journalism. Take that, canonical authors.

I was a freelancer for the first six months of my Improper tenure, but in early 2000, I joined the staff full time. This was good news for my roommates, because working at The Improper, then as now, meant great parties. The magazine's former fashion editor, Samantha House, had a particular flair for concocting memorable events. At one celebration, I arrived at a hair salon to find that Samantha had done up three models to the theme of "Earth, Water and Fire." They had crazy Zoolander-esque hairdos, of course. What they didn't have was clothing. Thus I found myself waiting in line at the bar behind a naked woman with a towering blue updo, while on the opposite wall an enormous screen displayed a video loop of a person getting body hair plucked at extreme close range. Samantha's parties were like a way of experiencing drugs without actually doing any. When I asked her where she found her models, she said, "Two of them are nudists, but I couldn't find three nudists, so I hired a stripper."

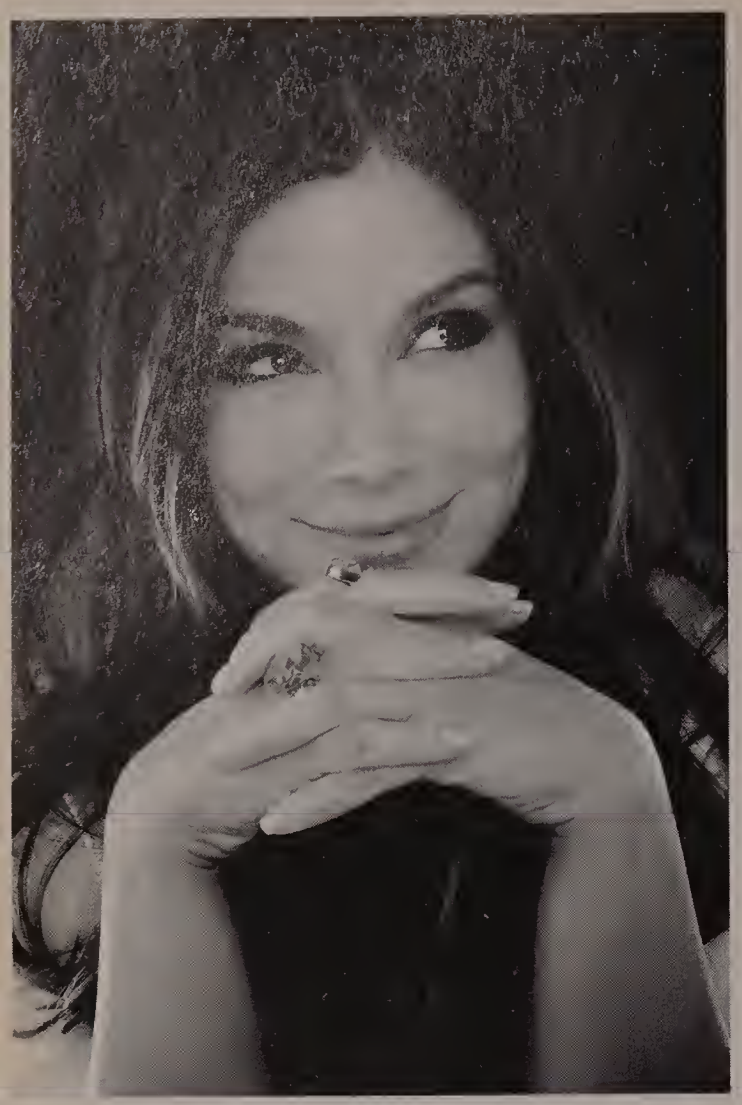
Speaking of strippers, when I look back on my assignments, there seems to be a clear theme. I've taken a cardio striptease class, been the only dude at a sex-toy sales party and attended a recital for graduates of Gypsy Rose pole-dancing school. The latter has the unfortunate distinction of being the only story I've ever written that was somehow never published. Which was awkward, because the strip recital was performed for an audience of one—me—purely for the sake of the story. So the proprietor, Wendy (a former Hanna-Barbera illustrator, Weird Al Yankovic casting assistant and current papal scholar), probably thinks I set up the whole thing just to be a big perv. I had an assignment, and I'd swear to that on all the dollar bills in my pocket.

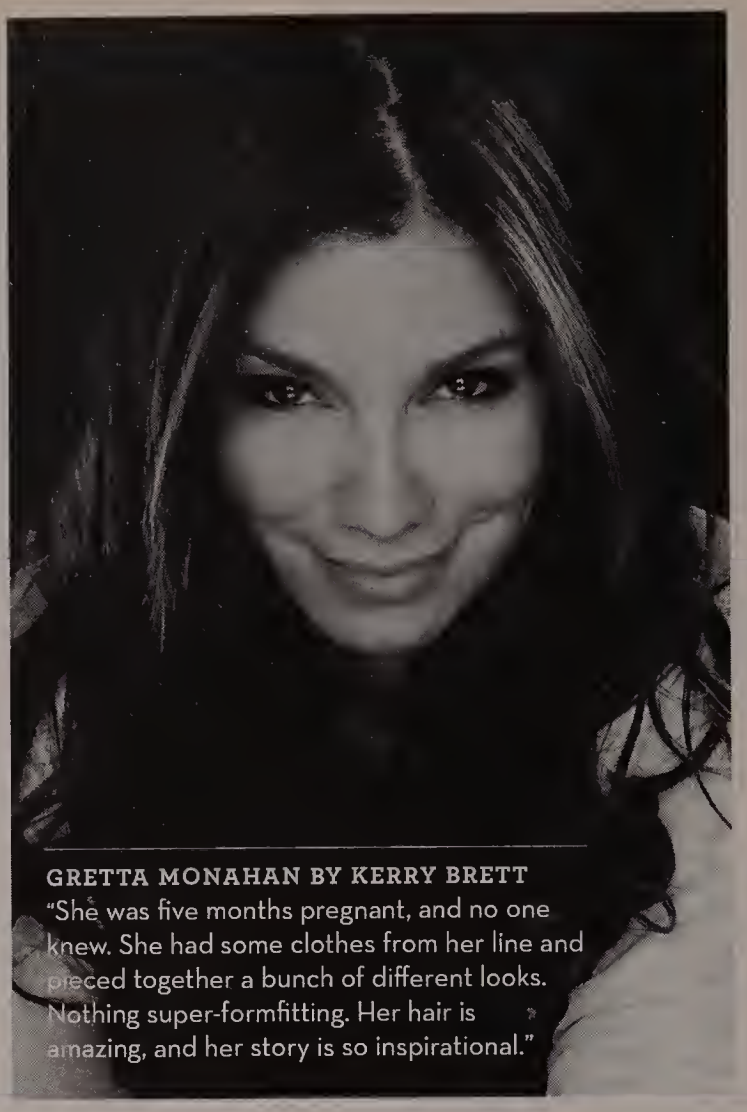
Over the years, I've toured the CIA's spy museum, taken trapeze lessons, dressed as a mascot (twice), danced onstage with the Flaming Lips at the Orpheum while dressed as a bunny, gone to a nightclub while wearing only a bathrobe, flipped tractor tires with strongmen, sailed Boston Harbor in the middle of the winter and sang my "Hey There Delilah" parody song at the Beehive.

OVER THE YEARS, I'VE TOURED THE CIA'S SPY MUSEUM, TAKEN TRAPEZE LESSONS, DRESSED AS A MASCOT (TWICE), DANCED ONSTAGE WITH THE FLAMING LIPS WHILE DRESSED AS A BUNNY AND GONE TO A NIGHTCLUB WHILE WEARING ONLY A BATHROBE.

For a story called "Straight Eye for the Queer Guy," I took three gentlemen of the gay persuasion to New Hampshire to go drag racing. While one of my guests wandered the pits wearing a fur coat, another climbed behind the wheel of an Infiniti M45 and beat the car's published quarter-mile time. I was so proud.



Besides being the catalyst for unusual experiences, working for The Improper is a great excuse to talk to interesting people. I've interviewed Bob Kraft, pre-fame Dane Cook, Tom Arnold, Tedy Bruschi, Joe Rogan and Mario Cantone. Knowing David Sedaris' fondness for taxidermy, I asked him which person he'd like to have on display in his living room. He thought for a moment and replied, "Christine Todd Whitman, former governor of New Jersey. Because people would walk in and say, 'Is that Christine Todd Whitman?'"



From the vantage point of my desk, I've looked up to see Anthony Michael Hall or Christopher Hitchens striding past. But some of the most interesting characters are the ones who actually work for the magazine. Once, a freelancer was in my office, scrawling upcoming deadlines in her planner, when I noticed that her schedule included a day labeled "Porn Debut." I asked her about that, and she replied, "Oh yeah, I'm going to be on HBO's Real Sex." And you couldn't remember that without writing it down?

Some Improper stories have altered the paths of people's lives. Four or five years ago, I wrote a story called "Baralympics" in which we filled the Bustonian with competitors and drove to several watering holes to find the bar-game champion. One condition of the Baralympic Games was that each competitor had to represent a country. Somewhere between Tom English's Cottage and Lucky Strike Lanes, Portugal and Italy formed diplomatic relations. They now live together in the Back Bay. That's the magic of The Improper. And, let's be honest, the Bustonian.

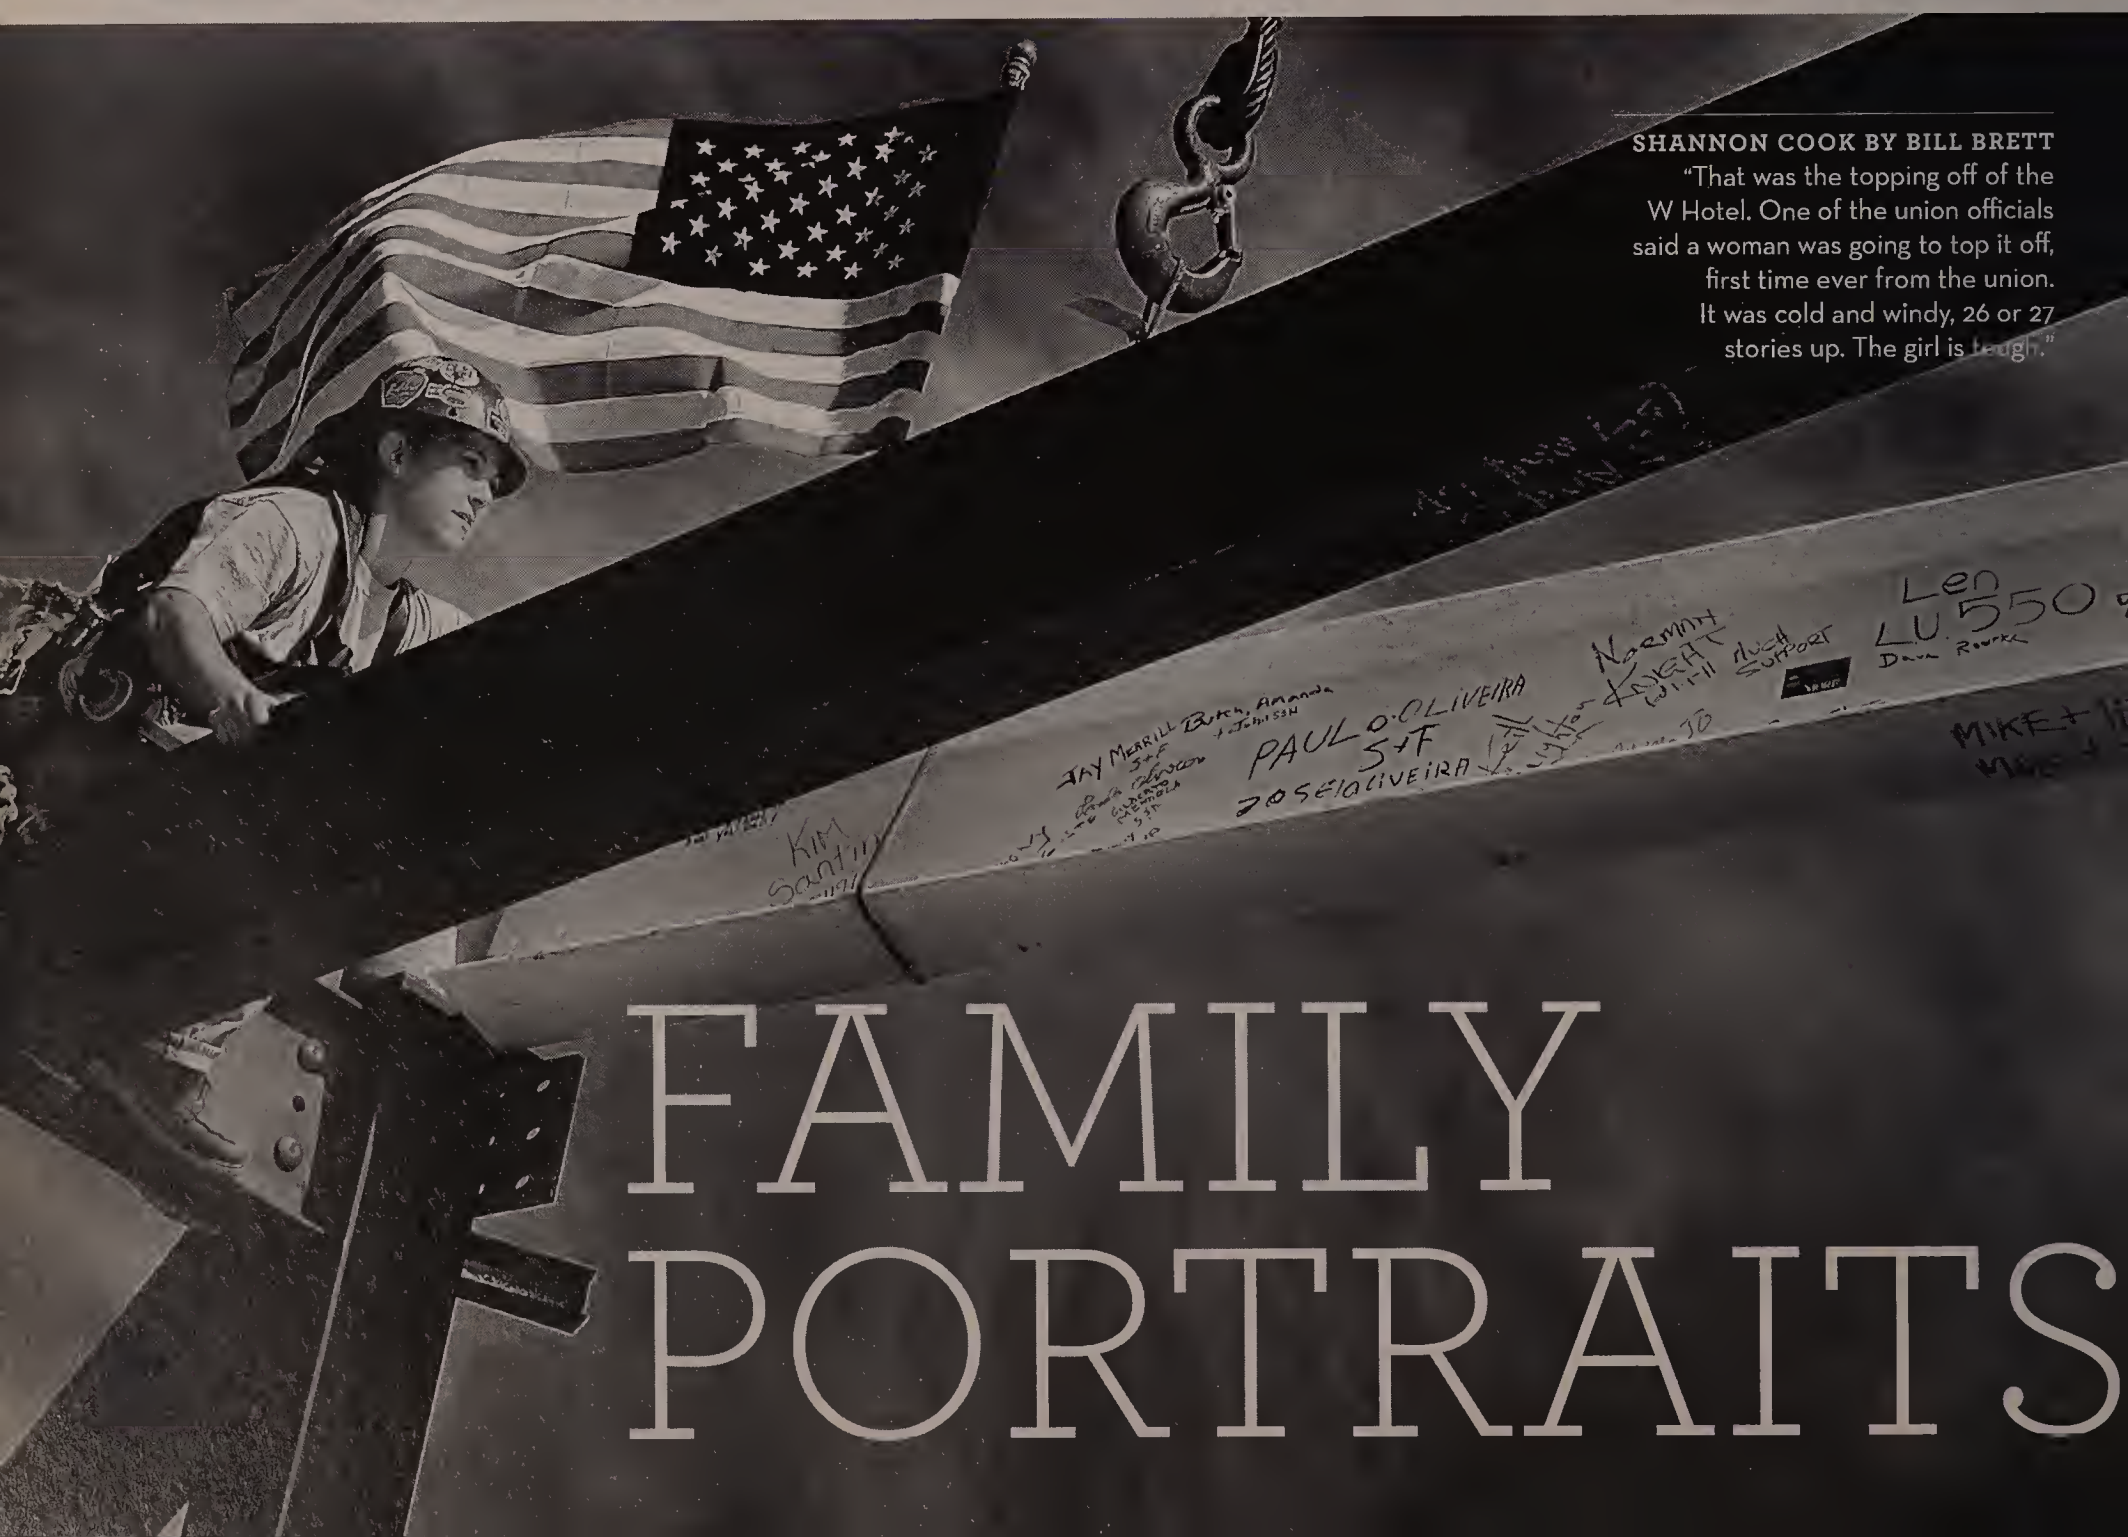
I've also been a romantic beneficiary of this publication. Back in 2003, a reader named Brian sent me an intriguing e-mail. He said, essentially, "Based on what I know about you from reading your column, I think you'd really like my friend Heather, and she'd like you." He proposed that Heather and I go out on a date. I figured that if it went well, then great. And if it didn't, it'd only be one date, and I'd at least have a good story. Heather, who'd never read my column and thus didn't know what she was getting herself into, agreed. About a year later, we were living together. Three years later, we were married. Seven years later, we had a baby. Taking Brian up on his proposal was the single best decision that I've ever made.



But sending my deluded job application to The Improper is right up there. At the time, I figured I'd give writing a shot, and if it didn't work out then I'd try something else. So far so good, and I'm deeply appreciative of all the bored people riding the T who make that possible. I mean, 237,600 words is getting toward the halfway mark of War and Peace. Maybe I should learn how to type. ×××

ART WITH A POINTE

SURE, OUR CITY IS A HUB for sports trophies, high-octane academics and traffic jams. Overlooked, sometimes, is our role as a creative center. Since 2003, (Ähts): The Boston Arts Festival has provided an outdoor stage for the aesthetic, the musical and the dramatic. More than 60 artists showcase their wares (everything from jewelry and clothing to painting and graphic prints), offer workshops and host demonstrations. Performances include shows from classical ensembles, indie bands, modern ballet troupes and lyrical poets. Broaden your horizons at Christopher Columbus Park Sept. 10–11. SARAH DWYER

Revel in It

Marching Orders The Revels are known throughout the city for their annual Christmas spectacular, but they've also been welcoming autumn for the last eight years with RiverSing. The musically inclined can meet in Harvard Square to march to the banks of the Charles River on Sept. 18. There, they'll be joined by choruses and by saxophone legend Stan Strickland to mark the coming equinox. And don't worry about forgetting the words—you can download lyric sheets in advance from their website. Kyle Wright

Doubles Planking

Mind Bender People tend to freak out every time Cirque du Soleil flings itself back into town. Sure, you could argue that seeing a clown turn himself into a human volleyball once is enough—but what if they spike him this time? In Quidam, Cirque explores the imagination of a bored girl. It's unclear what her parents are feeding her, but she's got some pretty whacked ideas concerning yo-yos, contortionists and one-handed balancing acts. Take a look inside the mind of this young dreamer through Sept. 11 at Agganis Arena. Kathleen Godbold

Captain America: The First Avenger ★★★ ½ Just when I thought I never wanted to see another superhero movie, the summer's most delightful surprise arrives with this cornball throwback in which local boy Chris Evans finally makes good. At the start of World War II, Evans' digitally-shrunken weakling Steve Rogers gets injected with a superserum that transforms him into a shining beacon of War Bond propaganda. Captain America is overflowing with a gee-whiz sense of wonder and gorgeously retro set designs. The movie is as square as Evans' jaw, but that only adds to the charm. The Nazis now have rocket ships and laser guns, and each individual sepia-toned set-piece is overscaled with pulp abandon. Director Joe Johnston's eager-to-please naiveté hasn't really found a home in blockbuster-land since 1991's The Rocketeer, but this is the right material for the right filmmaker. From here on out, every superhero movie needs to have Tommy Lee Jones on the sidelines, barking insults the way only Tommy Lee Jones can. (In the suburbs.)

Cowboys & Aliens ★ ½ I just had to travel back in time to break the news to my nine-year-old self that James Bond and Indiana Jones teaming up to fight space-lizards in the Old West isn't the awesomest movie in the history of the world. Boasting five credited screenwriters, a raft of story-by credits and bearing little resemblance to the comic book from which it takes its title, director John Favreau's misjudged genre-bender treats a schlocky premise with humorless solemnity. Daniel Craig's Man With No Name wakes up with an alien bracelet and no memory, earning the ire of Harrison Ford's crusty cattle baron. Then UFO's attack, leaving the two to out-gruff each other and start a posse to rescue everyone from a spaceship. The movie is grindingly violent, and it unforgivably refuses to remark upon the irony of white settlers having to team up with an Apache tribe to rescue their land from an occupying force seeking to pilfer resources and commit genocide. (At Somerville Theatre and in the suburbs.)

Crazy, Stupid, Love ★★★ Unlike other freaky-deaky method actors like Sean Penn and Nicolas Cage, Ryan Gosling happens to look like a movie star, and this too-carefully structured romantic comedy benefits immeasurably from his brand of anarchy. Backing up a bit, the film stars Steve Carell (who also produced) as a middle-aged husband unceremoniously dropped by his childhood sweetheart (Julianne Moore) after she's had an ill-advised dalliance with a co-worker (a smarmy-as-ever Kevin Bacon). Adrift and alone for the first time in his life, Carell takes up residence on a barstool at a demographically unfriendly singles' haunt. The self-pity is enough to interrupt Gosling's idle rich, bar-cruising lothario, and the following makeover is at first a dizzying sort of Pygmalion. Sadly, Crazy, Stupid, Love can't sustain that level of manic invention and eventually settles into something more conventional, but pleasant all the same. Luckily, by then we're invested enough in these characters to cheer for the feel-good ending. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Don't Be Afraid of the Dark ★ ½ Famously dashed together in two weeks, writer Nigel McKeand's 1973 ABC Movie of the Week, Don't Be Afraid of the Dark, was the kind of obscure treat that used to be circulated on bootleg VHS tapes by traumatized teens. A passion project for writer/producer Guillermo del Toro, this long-delayed remake winds up straddling the line between a modest premise and reckless CGI abandon. McKeand's teleplay has been thoroughly del Toro-ized. With countless echoes of Pan's Labyrinth, sad-eyed Sally (Bailee Madison) is tormented by creepy-crawly creatures living in the mansion being renovated by her estranged father (Guy Pearce) and would-be stepmom (Katie Holmes). The screenplay leads us to believe that these preoccupied parents consider the mayhem a figment of Sally's imagination, but director Troy Nixey (a comic-book artist making his feature debut) errs by making the attacks too volatile, defying the story's logic. Why would any sane family remain in this obviously haunted house? Less would've been a lot more. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Fright Night ★★ ½ Good thing Colin Farrell hasn't seen Twilight. As the creepy new neighbor to Anton Yelchin's suspicious teen, he's clearly having a great time as a hunky monster who likes to play with his food. Just good enough to make you wish it was better, director Craig Gillespie's 3-D remake of the 1985 late-night cable staple shuffles around some events from Tom Holland's original, working best when it's conflating horror with adolescent sexual paranoia. Bellflower ★★★ Written and directed by Evan Glodell. Starring Glodell, Jessie Wiseman, Tyler Dawson and Rebekah Brandes. At Kendall Square.

A FEW LESSONS LEARNED while watching Bellflower:

(1) Guys, if a girl says that you shouldn't get too attached "because I'll hurt you," she's probably not bluffing.

(2) Girls, be careful how you break up with a guy who owns his own flamethrower.

(3) Audiences, when a movie begins with a quote from Road Warrior villain Lord Humungus, you aren't about to watch a conventional romance.

So what the heck is Bellflower? That's an excellent question.

An angsty missive from the broken heart of dude nation, Bellflower is the story of love gone wrong with a heady, apocalyptic twist. A surprise smash at Sundance, writer/director Evan Glodell's debut is stubbornly original and sometimes just plain stubborn. It's confounding, but there's something extremely personal happening here.

Marti Noxon brings the same wiseacre sensibility she used as a writer for Buffy the Vampire Slayer, but Gillespie, who previously helmed the unfortunate Lars and the Real Girl, relies too much on special effects, and the 3-D presentation makes a muddle of Javier Agguiresarobe's moody cinematography. There's a neat gag when the vampires disintegrate into clouds of 3-D cinder, but it's a steep price to pay for watching a movie set at night while you're wearing sunglasses. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

A Good Old Fashioned Orgy ★ Following the dire Hall Pass and Horrible Bosses, the year's third lousy comedy starring Jason Sudeikis proves that some actors should just stick to TV. This time he's playing a spoiled 30-something who spends every weekend with his high school friends throwing lavish theme parties at his father's summer house in the Hamptons. When the old man puts the place on the market, Sudeikis decides they should go out with a bang. Literally. For reasons that don't make much sense, this close-knit group of pals decides to throw a Kama Sutra–themed sex party, and the filmmaking team of Alex Gregory and Peter Huyck seem to think they're making a raunchy version of The Big Chill. There's not a believable, emotionally honest moment in the picture, which wouldn't be a problem if it had a few laughs. Each character has been assigned a single personality trait, with Tyler Labine's fat-dude sidekick standing out as a particular embarrassment. Just awful. (At Kendall Square.)

The Guard ★★★ ½ Suffused with a strain of romantic Irish fatalism, writer/director John Michael McDonagh's debut plunders the clichés of a thousand interracial buddy-cop comedies, emerging with an ode to shabby nobility that's stranger and sadder than expected. It's also fookin' hilarious—or at least that's how Sergeant Gerry Boyle might describe it. Played by Brendan Gleeson in one of the great performances of his career. Boyle's a steely-eyed lout, whiling away the hours in a state of perpetual boredom and wasted disappointment, punctuated by occasional visits from Dublin prostitutes. But when a gang of English cocaine traffickers arrive in town, so does a smooth-talking Southern dandy from the FBI (Don Cheadle, master of the reaction shot). Turns out that, like a plus-sized version of every great Humphrey Bogart and Clint Eastwood character, there's a strict moral code lurking somewhere beneath Boyle's anti-social dissolution. The Guard is raw, profane and strangely moving. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy and in the suburbs.)

Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, Part II ★★★ In keeping with the slavish, Classics Illustrated film-to-screen transcriptions preferred by the ravenous fan base, the latest Harry Potter picture doesn't quite hold up as a movie of its own. This series has been dogged from day one by a preaching-to-the-choir mentality and an unwillingness to adapt to any real cinematic structure. BBC director David Yates (who helmed the final four installments) has an eye for spectacle and a bent towards TV-miniseries dramaturgy. It's nearly impossible for us muggles to even remotely understand what's happening anymore. But this final Potter movie flaunts of dive bars and low-rent apartment complexes, the film stars Glodell as Woodrow, a 20-something slacker who is, like everybody else in this universe, a raging alcoholic. Between the blur of blacked-out evenings, Woodrow and his best friend, Aiden (Tyler Dawson), obsessively rewatch Mad Max movies and tinker with homemade weapons of mass destruction, joking about being prepared for the impending apocalypse.

Enter Milly (Jessie Wiseman), a bad news kind of gal who wins Woodrow's heart after beating him in the local tavern's cricket-eating contest. She's obviously nothing but trouble, but at least she tries to warn him first.

Undeterred, love-struck Woodrow takes her out on a first date to the most disgusting roadside diner in Texas. That's right, Texas. Their days-long drive is made a mite more comfortable by the nifty whiskey dispenser Woodrow has installed above the glove compartment. "It's like a James Bond car for drunks!" Milly exclaims with infatuation in her eyes.

It may sound innocuous, but there's always a nagging undercurrent that something awful could happen at any time. Shot on hand-made digital cameras, the photography drifts in and out of focus with a thick coat of grime smeared across the lens. A pulsating orange color scheme ebbs and flows depending on the intensity of the scene. The film's sheer ugliness is paradoxically beautiful to behold. Glodell's filmmaking sets your teeth on edge.

Barreling along in a brain-damaged hallucinatory rage, the movie drifts in and out of fantasy and nightmare.

As forewarned, things don't stay sweet for long. I don't want to reveal much, not just for fear of spoilers, but also because the movie goes so cockeyed that a brief synopsis wouldn't do it justice. Barreling along in a brain-damaged hallucinatory rage, the movie drifts in and out of fantasy and nightmare. Catastrophes and casualties mount as Woodrow and Milly find themselves locked in a spiral of cruelty and guilt.

Looming large over the picture's second half is the Medusa, a 1972 Buick Skylark modified by Aiden to break speed records and belch flames. It'd be a worthy ride for Mad Max himself, and as far as over-compensating symbols of male aggression go, you'd be hard pressed to top it.

Skidding out into abstraction, Bellflower both embraces and critiques the macho muscle-car posturing epitomized by the Medusa. The increasingly violent breaks with "reality" seem to be subconscious projections, not just by Woodrow, but by Glodell as well. They're both trying to assert their masculinity in the face of sadness and humiliation. It's a raw, emotionally honest depiction of heartbreak as a personal apocalypse, which I suppose might sound silly if you haven't had your heart broken lately.

It's a shame these unknown actors aren't always up to the task. Indeed, a couple of conventionally staged, cringe-worthy dialogue scenes indicate just how wrong this might have gone were it not for Glodell's audiovisual audacity. Bellflower might eventually veer out of control, but it's out of control in a thrilling, exciting way that reminds us what independent filmmaking is supposed to be.

It doesn't feel like Glodell made Bellflower because he wanted to. It feels like he had to, just to get all this stuff off of his chest. It feels like it comes from somewhere true, so much so that you'll wonder what the real-life Milly did to him. ✖✖✖ an undeniable pop-apocalyptic grandeur, and it's finally got a freakin' ending. Ralph Fiennes' noseless Voldemort keeps getting beat down by the upstart kids and their magical gobbledygook. With all the exposition dumps having taken place during the previous picture, we're now just watching one bloody payoff and epic battle sequence after another. I had no idea what was going on most of the time, but it's rather thrilling all the same. (In the suburbs.)

The Help ★★ This surprise smash is being enjoyed by an audience that has gone sadly underserved by the months-long barrage of superheroes and giant robots that typically define summer entertainment. On one hand, we should rejoice, as this is a female-driven picture with no special effects. But it's a troubling film all the same. Based on Kathryn Stockett's best seller, The Help takes place in Jackson, Miss., circa 1962, when audience surrogate Skeeter Phelan (Emma Stone) returns home to her family's plantation and has an ideological falling-out with her well-to-do childhood friends over their nasty racist behavior. The slightly icky wish-fulfillment fantasy allows white audiences to rally around Skeeter's do-gooder activism while rendering her peers as cartoon monsters. It's a very pleasant lie, sending you out of the cinema on a high note. But what vexes me is why the lie even needed to be told in the first place. Aren't there enough true stories of heroism from the civil rights era? Is it really appropriate for us to all stand and applaud this courageous, fictional white girl? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Magic Trip: Ken Kesey's Search for a Kool Place ★ Here we go again. Charting Ken Kesey's decline from brilliant novelist to drug-addled dullard, directors Alex Gibney and Alison Ellwood have cobbled together hundreds of hours of unwatchable footage from the Merry Band of Pranksters' 1964 cross-country voyage, already immortalized in Tom Wolfe's The Electric Kool-Aid Acid Test. After setting the literary world on fire with One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest and Sometimes a Great Notion, Kesey hooked up with a bunch of similarly minded hippies, painted a school bus with Day-Glo colors and hit the road, pausing in random places to dance in the woods. With legendary Neal Cassady (Jack Kerouac's inspiration for On the Road's Dean Moriarty) at the wheel, this pointless bus trip has become a totem of boomer nostalgia and myth. But finally seeing all this raw, barely-shaped footage, absent the grandeur of Wolfe's prose, it's just a bunch of boring acid-heads who never shut up. Torture. (At Kendall Square.)

Midnight in Paris ★★★ ½ I know. Everyone always tells you that the new one is Woody Allen's comeback film. I've been burned by that rap, too. But this is a lighter-than-air, casually profound piece that calls to mind The Purple Rose of Cairo in its magical realism and ruefully funny undercurrents. Owen Wilson stars as a hack Hollywood screenwriter vacationing in Paris who finds himself magically transported to the 1920s, where he boozes it up with Ernest Hemingway, F. Scott Fitzgerald and Adrien Brody's hilariously self-infatuated Salvador Dalí. The punchline comes early: While Wilson was always pining for "the good old days," once he gets there, he discovers that everybody else shares his longing. Gorgeously shot by cinematographer Daris Khondji and directed by Allen with a care we haven't seen in eons, it's a deceptively slight exploration of nostalgia as beautiful quicksand. The only thing keeping this from being a classic is Allen's typically misogynistic treatment of Rachel McAdams' character. Otherwise, it's lovely. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

One Day ★★ Hamstrung by a shallow central gimmick, director Lone Scherfig's follow-up to his overpraised An Education stars Anne Hathaway and Jim Sturgess as star-crossed college pals who spend decades finding annoying excuses not to live happily ever after. Adapting his own best-selling novel, screenwriter David Nicholls employs the grating literary device of checking in on his characters on the same day, every year. The beautiful Hathaway pines for the one who got away in a variety of period-specific outfits and flattering haircuts. Sturgess, a pasty cipher who inexplicably keeps getting cast as a leading man, hardly seems worth her trouble. It's hard to tell what she sees in this womanizing drunk who takes the better part of 20 years to realize that she's madly in love with him. As the picture must jump a year at the end of every scene, Scherfig seems to have expended all her energy on finding the right costumes and pop songs. I guess it works as a fashion show. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

30 Minutes or Less ★★ This underachieving riff on 1980s buddy-action comedies stars The Social Network's Jesse Eisenberg as a slacker pizza delivery guy blackmailed into robbing a bank after a couple of drunken ne'er do wells (Danny McBride and Nick Swardson) strap a bomb to his chest. Vaguely distasteful, as the picture was inspired by a true 2003 case in which a middle-aged drug addict exploded in front of news crews, Zombieland director Ruben Fleischer's sophomore effort devotes the bulk of its slender 83-minute running time to undisciplined improvisation. Unfortunately, a little of Danny McBride goes a very long way, and too much of the picture is wasted letting the clock run out. Parks and Recreation's Aziz Ansari seems particularly out of his league, but, bless his heart, Eisenberg gives a bona fide performance here, as if aiming for another Oscar nomination while everybody else just clowns around. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

FAMILY VALUES

The Avett Brothers play the Life Is Good Festival on Sept. 24.

GIVEN THE AVETT BROTHERS' sentimental songs and the fact that both siblings married and settled near their parents' North Carolina farm, it's no surprise that younger brother Seth prefers a family-friendly festival to other venues.

Avett should feel right at home when his roots-rocking outfit coheadlines the Life Is Good Festival at Prowse Farm in Canton on Sept. 24. "In a theater, it might make sense to play some darker material," he says. "But at a family festival, you really embrace the fun of it.... It's just genuinely celebratory."

The fun began for the group a decade ago. Seth and Scott Avett started playing acoustically as a breezy alternative to their neo-punk rock act, drawing on the influence of Doc Watson and Woody Guthrie as well as Led Zeppelin and Nirvana.

"Taking a banjo and a guitar and walking to a street corner and singing was immensely attractive," says Avett, 31, four years younger than Scott. "We were used to traveling with this big, loud rock band, which wasn't mobile at all. Not only did you need the gear, but you needed electricity."

Rounded out by bassist Bob Crawford, the combo found its charge in the rowdy passion of live performance. "If you're playing a Mexican restaurant, and there are only 12 people in the room, and they're not there to hear music, you may do more to get their attention," Avett says. "We made idiots of ourselves quite a few times, just flat-out screaming, delivering old-time songs."

The buzz grew to frat parties and regional clubs before the band began playing nationwide and added cellist Joe Kwon. "We learned to sing loud and project our voices by playing many shows without microphones," Avett says. "Now we're in the studio, and Scott and I have to remind each other, 'You don't have to yell. Let's try a soft delivery.'"

Über-producer Rick Rubin (Red Hot Chili Peppers, Johnny Cash) similarly advised the brothers to slow down their attack when he guided their 2009 major-label debut, I and Love and You. "It's a constant reminder with Rick that you never know if something's going to work until you try it," says Avett, whose band has been collaborating with Rubin on a varied follow-up for an early 2012 release. "There's a great connection with our friendship and artistry."

I and Love and You marked a turning point, not only for the band to approach the studio differently than the stage, but to favor sweeping, emotive, piano-based ballads. "The songs are always the focus," says Avett, who steps out on the rare upbeat number "Kick Drum Heart," which evokes Billy Joel more than bluegrass. "Some people can't stand our newest record, because they like it raw and maybe out of tune at times. They like the spontaneity, and I like that, too, but I really love very well-made albums."

The spontaneity remains in their concerts. "We really try to embrace the vibe of the day and the venue, and we never play the same set twice," he says. "We let the music move us, and sometimes the music moves you in a way that's destructive to the instruments.... When the show's done, we don't wipe them down and put them in a glass case. We throw them around and expect a lot out of them."

Concerned for their own durability, the multi-instrumentalist brothers now eschew alcohol to keep themselves sharp. "It's not our path to burn out as young men," says Avett. "Drinking on the road is the quickest way to do that. We've just got to focus on what we're here to do, which is to write songs and sing them for people." ✖✖✖

Free to Roam

Brassless Chaps With an array of unusual instruments and a penchant for boundary crossing, nothing keeps Hot Day at the Zoo locked in a cage. The New England band spices up classic bluegrass sounds with hints of jazz and rock, but it maintains the essence of the genre with plenty of harmonica-blowin' and banjo-pickin'. Eclectic, yet ordered, the most succinct way to describe the band's sound is "zoograss." Their fall tour kicks off at Brighton Music Hall on Sept. 9. Hilary White

THE ARMENIAN LIBRARY AND MUSEUM OF AMERICA is proud to present the exhibition

KARSH
CELEBRATING HUMANITY
in our newly renovated Bedoukian Gallery
opening to the public September 22, 2011

During his sixty-year career, Yousuf Karsh defined the photographic portrait in the 20th century, and his powerful images continue to resonate today. A citizen of Canada and the world, he was proud of his Armenian heritage. This exhibition contains the portraits of prominent Armenians in addition to his iconic images of statesmen, artists, musicians, and scientists.

Not Your Average Bare

Cassatt Recorder Artist Cynthia Packard is Cape Cod's answer to Mary Cassatt. Descended from a long line of painters, the Provincetown-based Packard's impressionist works balance gravity and simplicity with short strokes and a soothing palette. Her lush-but-whispery style animates her subjects to create what can be called not-so-still-lifes. Study her scope and color schemes through September at the Chase Young Gallery. Sarah Dwyer

Life Is a Highway

Christopher Boucher throws a wrench in the tired plotline of single parenting in his debut novel, How to Keep Your Volkswagen Alive. Named after a best-selling hippie handbook, the story follows a father parenting his not-so-ordinary son: a 1960s-era VW Bug. Although zany on the surface, the characters manage to work through some human difficulties in chapters organized like a car manual. Boucher swings by Newtonville Books on Sept. 8.

HOW TO SPLIT IN STYLE

Spot On

Many countries need and deserve our help, and in the early '90s Croatia was certainly on the list. Yet even now that they've recovered from the war, I'd still like to buy them a vowel.

Take Mljet, for instance—the last island on our sailing trip along the Dalmatian Coast, from Split to Dubrovnik. I've never seen a prettier spot: The electric blue Adriatic forms two inland saltwater lakes, and in the middle of one is an island with a 12th-century monastery. I ate one of the most memorable meals of my life on Mljet—wild boar, shot that afternoon—and the people couldn't have been more hospitable. But I'll be damned if I could wrap my tongue around the name of the place.

That was pretty much the case wherever we went, beginning on the mainland, in Split. We were shown around by a local, Andro Tartaglia, who owns an outfit called Meridien Adventures. The country's second biggest city, Split is built in and around the remains of the Emperor Diocletian's palace, and the exterior (in pretty good shape after 1,700 years) contains labyrinthine alleys punctuated by piazzas and Roman ruins. Diocletian persecuted the Christians mercilessly, so it's worth a chuckle that he wound up buried inside the basilica, and there's an undeniable charm to the incongruity of stores selling the latest sneakers and T-shirts inside a structure whose original inhabitants wore togas and sandals.

We chartered a 40-foot sailboat with a skipper from Hvar Adventure, and we cruised out past Brac, the island where the marble for the White House was quarried. Hvar was our first stop and probably the glitziest of the islands we visited. The town square—dominated by the lion of Venice—is lined with cafes where sleek tourists fresh off their yachts indulge in the Croatian equivalent of Nantucket barhopping. Still, the place is nowhere near as developed as, say, the Algarve, and retains a tremendous charm.

The Dalmatian Coast is rocky, with mountainous islands covered in pine trees, and on our second day, we dropped anchor in a little cove. After a swim in water so clear you could see straight to the bottom 20-feet below, we strolled through vineyards to a tavern where we ate octopus salad, a mille-feuille of eggplant, cheese and tomato, and kebabs large enough to choke a horse. All this, of course, was washed down with local wine. Then we went for another swim and set sail for Vis.

The island's old port, Kut, is home to the Villa Kalliope, a restaurant set in a sculpture garden where we enjoyed scorpion fish and the owner invited us to join his poker game. In the morning, it was blowing 40 knots, so we opted to stay in port and explore. We'd brought along bikes and rode to Komiza, a town on the other side of the island, dominated by a Romanesque church, a citadel with a clock tower and cafes lining the waterfront. We resumed the eating and drinking at a restaurant built inside a 19th-century lobster hatchery, which was delightful but for a table of 55 voluble German tourists.

Korcula, which we sailed past the next day, is the purported birthplace of Marco Polo, and it's a wonder he ever left such a sweet spot. At sunset, we reached Lastovo, the only Dalmatian island whose main town faces inland and away from the sea, either to defend itself from pirates or because the pirates lived there, depending on whom you ask. A cove where we encountered a boatful of naked Russians was followed by spiny lobster for dinner.

After visiting Mljet, we returned to the mainland. Dubrovnik, Venice's greatest rival and the former Republic of Ragusa, is a walled city-state that successfully played the Italians off the Turks and maintained its independence until the Hapsburgs added it to their empire in the 1800s. One of Europe's true gems, the limestone "Stradum" is worn to a high gloss and lined with treasures like the Rector's Palace, the Church of St. Blaise and Onofrio's fountains. The narrow side streets, meanwhile, offer an escape from the hordes disgorged from cruise ships, and our meandering walk led us to a wine bar where the owner uncorked some of the finest reds I've ever tasted.

It was the perfect way to say good-bye to a place where, incidentally, we never set eyes on a single white dog with black spots. But I'd gladly go back to the Dalmation Coast 101 times. ✖✖✖

Heineken MONSTER ENERGY

THE SKIMMER MAKES A BARTENDER PART CRAFTSMAN, PART ASSASSIN.

Nothing like this weapon of choice seals in the lager's flavor. And with one swipe, it masterfully cuts the top foam. Yes, all froth plays a role, and sometimes that role requires beheading.

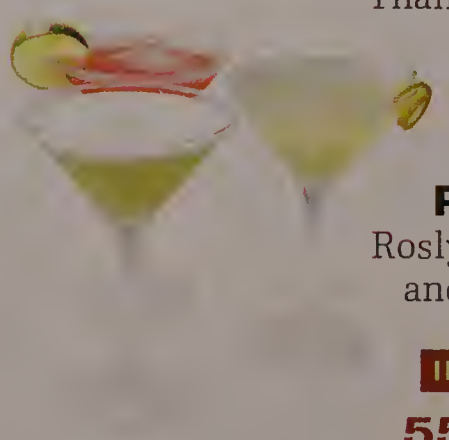
The IMPROPER

Do-Over

As the economy behaves like it's been slapped, exposed to avian flu and then lightly machine-gunned, it's probably wise to preach austerity—especially regarding food. In the coming decades, Americans will need to adapt their diets to an exhausted, sunburnt planet. Imagine the nub of a hot dog placed between a dozen converging swarms of army ants, and you get a (admittedly hysterical) metaphor for the future of the world's food system.



Well, yes. But the poets say something about time's wingéd chariot and the deserts of vast eternity. You only have one life, so don't squander it eating boiled quinoa. It's essential for spiritual health to occasionally sit down with good meat, better company and a well-groomed wine list. I did this a few nights ago at KO Prime, where we ate a Lucullan sequence of dishes—mussels steamed in Spanish cava and St-Germain, an heirloom tomato salad in the colors of the Jamaican flag, the Platonic filet. The most surprising item was a twist on cobbler, exchanging peaches for foie gras and dressing the plate with blackberry puree, honey-toasted oat and almond streusel, and a peach and nectarine salad with a peach schnapps gastrique topped with micro opal basil. It was the sort of dish to leave puritans spluttering.

Which is the point of this issue. We asked six chefs to reimagine the New England staples, taking our hackneyed lobsters and cooking them anew. The results prove that tradition is overrated. Time doesn't stand still.

BOOKING COOKS

'ANYONE CAN THROW A STEAK ON A HOT PAN AND KNOW IT WILL taste good, but why?" asks Salts chef Gabriel Bremer. Harvard students interested in the answer attempt to sign up for the unprecedentedly popular "Science and Cooking," a class boasting a weekly open lecture series with guests like Alinea mastermind Grant Achatz (appearing on Oct. 3) and three-star Michelin chef Joan Roca, who cooked the beef above. As a mentor, Bremer judges the class' final, in which students work with chefs like Wylie Dufresne to fashion creative comestibles. Spots are in such demand they have to be raffled, and the lecture halls are packed with a passionate public, including folk whose kitchen experiments don't venture beyond boiling water. But as Bremer says, "Everybody loves to eat."

Good Eats

Still Rolling

The folks at Redbones have been serving smoky St. Louis ribs and chopped barbecued brisket in Davis Square for 24 years. Now they're venturing across the river in a shiny red food truck to serve lunching Back Bayers. On weekdays only, you can jam a napkin into your shirt collar and dig into a streamlined menu featuring favorites from the original location—ribs, pulled meats, chili-cheese dogs—at wallet-friendly prices (sandwich combos are just $8). Ties have been lost to less, but for a working lunch, you couldn't ask for much more.
